CHAP. I.

In which certain personages of this delightful history are introduced to the reader's acquaintance.

I T was on the great northern road from York to London, about the beginning of the month October, and the hour of eight in the evening, that four travellers were by a violent shower of rain driven for shelter into a little public house on the side of the highway, distinguished by a sign which was said to exhibit the sigure of a black lion. The kitchen, in which they assembled, was the only room for entertainment in the house, paved with red bricks, remarkably clean, surnished.

ed with three or four Windfor chairs. adorned with shining plates of pewter, and copper fauce-pans nicely scoured, that even dazzled the eyes of the beholder; while a chearful fire of feacoal blazed in the chimney. Three of the travellers, who arrived on horseback, having seen their cattle properly accommodated in the stable, agreed to pass the time, until the weather should clear up, over a bowl of rumbo, which was accordingly prepared: but the fourth, refusing to join their company, took his station at the opposite fide of the chimney, and called for a pint of two-penny, with which he indulged himself apart. At a little distance, on his left hand, there was another groupe, confisting of the landlady a decent widow, her two daughters, the elder of whom feemed to be about the age of fifteen, and a country lad, who ferved both as waiter and oftler. and all sall and

The focial triumvirate was composed of Mr. Fillet, a country practitioner in surgery and midwisery, Capt.

Crowe, and his nephew Mr. Thomas Clarke, an attorney. Fillet was a man of some education, and a great deal of experience, shrewd, sly, and fenfible. Capt. Crowe had commanded a merchant-ship in the Mediterranean-trade for many years, and faved fome money by dint of frugality and traffick. He was an excellent seaman, brave, active, friendly in his way, and scrupulously honest; but as little acquainted with the world as a fucking child; whimfical, impatient, and so impetuous that he could not help breaking in upon the conversation, whatever it might be, with repeated interruptions, that feemed to burst from him by involuntary impulse: when he himself attempted to fpeak, he never finished his period; but made fuch a number of abrupt transitions, that his discourse seemed to be an unconnected feries of unfinished sentences, the meaning of which it was not easy to decypher. His nephew, Tom Clarke, was a young fellow, whose goodness of heart even B 2 the

the exercise of his profession had not been able to corrupt. Before strangers he never owned himself an attorney, without blushing, though he had no reason to blush for his own practice; for he constantly refused to engage in the cause of any client whose character was equivocal, and was never known to act with fuch industry as when concerned for the widow and orphan, or any other object that fued in forma pauperis. Indeed he was fo replete with human kindness, that as often as an affecting story or circumstance was told in his hearing, it overflowed at his eyes. Being of a warm complexion, he was very fusceptible of passion, and somewhat libertine in his amours. In other respects, he piqued himself on understanding the practice of the courts, and in private company he took pleafure in laying down the law; but he was an indifferent orator, and tediously circumstantial in his explanations: his stature was rather diminutive; but, upon the whole, he had some title to ·the the character of a pretty, dapper, little fellow. The folitary guest had fomething very forbidding in his aspect, which was contracted by an habitual frown. His eyes were small and red, and so deep set in the fockets, that each appeared like the undistinguished snuff of a farthing-candle, gleaming through the horn of a dark lanthorn. His nostrils were elevated in scorn, as if his fense of smelling had been perpetually offended by some unsavory odour; and he looked as if he wanted to thrink within himself, from the impertinence of fociety. He wore a black periwig as straight as the pinions of a raven, and this was covered with an hat flapped, and fastened to his head by a speckled handkerchief tied under his chin. He was wrapped in a great coat of brown frize, under which he feemed to conceal a small bundle. His name was Ferret, and his character distinguished by three peculiarities. He was never feen to fmile: he was never heard to speak in praise of any person whatsoever; B 3 and . and he was never known to give a direct answer to any question that was asked: but seemed, on all occasions, to be actuated by the most perverse spirit of contradiction.

Capt. Crowe, having remarked that it was fqually weather, asked how far it was to the next market-town; and understanding that the distance was not less than fix miles, faid he had a good mind to come to an anchor for the night, if so be as he could have a tolerable berth in this here harbour. Mr. Fillet, perceiving by his stile that he was a fea-faring gentleman, observed that their landlady was not used to lodge fuch company; and expressed fome furprize, that he who had no doubt endured fo many storms and hardships at sea, should think much of travelling five or fix miles a horseback by moon-light. " For my part, faid he, I ride in all weathers, and at all hours, without minding cold, wet, wind, or darkness. My constitution is so case-hardened, that I believe I could live all the year at Spitzbergen. What

With respect to this road, I know every foot of it fo exactly, that I'll engage to travel forty miles upon it blindfold, without making one false step; and if you have faith enough to put yourselves under my auspices, I will conduct you fafe to an elegant inn, where you will meet with the best accommodation." "Thank you, brother, (replied the Captain:) we are much beholden to you for your courteous offer; but, howsomever, you must not think I mind foul weather more than my neighbours. I have worked hard aloft and allow in many a taught gale---but this here is the case, d'ye see; we have run down a long day's reckoning: our beafts have had a hard spell; and as for my own hap, brother, I doubt my bottom-planks have loft fome of their sheathing, being as how I a'n't used to that kind of scrubbing."

The doctor, who had practifed on board a man of war in his youth, and was perfectly well acquainted with the Captain's dialect, assured him, that if his bottom was damaged, he would new-pay it with an excellent falve, which he always carried about him, to guard against such accidents on the road: but Tom Clarke, who feemed to have cast the eyes of affection upon the landlady's eldest daughter, Dolly, objected to their proceeding farther without rest and refreshment, as they had already travelled fifty miles fince morning; and he was fure his uncle must be fatigued both in mind and body, from vexation as well as from a hard exercise, to which he had not been accustomed. Fillet then defisted, faying, he was forry to find the Captain had any cause for vexation; but he hoped it was not an incurable evil. This expression was accompanied with a look of curiofity, which Mr. Clarke was glad of an occafion to gratify; for, as we have hinted above, he was a very communicative gentleman, and the affair which now lay upon his stomach interested him nearly. "I'll affure you, Sir, (faid he) this here gentleman, captain captain Crowe, who is my mother's own brother, has been cruelly used by fome of his relations. He bears as good a character as any captain of a ship on the Royal Exchange, and has undergone a variety of hardships at sea. What d'ye think, now, of his burfting all his finews, and making his eyes start out of his head, in pulling his ship off a rock, whereby he faved to his owners"----Here he was interrupted by the Captain, who exclaimed, "Belay, Tom Belay :---prithee, don't veer out fuch a deal of jaw. Clap a stopper on thy cable, and bring thyself up, my lad:----What a deal of fluff thou hast pumped up concerning burfting, and starting, and pulling ships, Laud have mercy upon us! .---- Look ye here brother----look ye here----mind these poor crippled joints: two fingers on the starboard, and three on the larboard hand: crooked, d'ye see, like the knees of a bilander .--- I'll tell you what, brother, you feem to be a---ship deep laden --- rich cargoe --- cur-B 5 rent

"Yes, indeed, Sir, (added Mr. Clarke,) those two malicious old women docked the intail, and left the estate to an alien."

Here Mr. Ferret thought proper to intermingle in the conversation with a " Pish, what, do'ft talk of docking the intail? Do'ft not know that by the Statute Westm. 2. 13 Ed. the will and intention of the donor must be fulfilled, and the tenant in tail shall not alien after iffue had, or before." "Give me leave, Sir, (replied Tom) I presume you are a practitioner in the law. Now you know, that in the case of a contingent remainder, the intail may be destroyed by levying a fine, and fuffering a recovery; or otherwife destroying the particular estate, before the contingency happens. If feoffees, who possels an estate only during ring the life of a fon, where divers remainders are limited over, make a feoffment in fee to him, by the feoff ment all the future remainders are destroyed. Indeed, a person in remainder may have a writ of Intrusion, if any do intrude after the death of a tenant for life; and the writ ex gravi querela lies to execute a devise in remainder, after the death of tenant in tail without iffue."---" Spoke like a true disciple of Geber," cries Ferrett. " No, Sir, (replied Mr. Clarke) counfellor Caper is in the conveyancingway --- I was clerk to ferjeant Croaker." " Ay, now you may fet up for yourfelf; (refumed the other) for you can prate as unintelligibly as the best of them."

"Perhaps (said Tom) I do not make myself understood: if so be as how that is the case, let us change the position; and suppose that this here case is a tail after a possibility of issue extinct. If a tenant in tail, after a possibility, make a feosfment of his land, he in reversion may enter for the

the forfeiture. Then we must make a distinction between general tail and special tail. It is the word body that makes the intail: --- there must be body in the tail, devised to heirs male or female, otherwise it is a fee-simple, because it is not limited of what body. Thus a corporation cannot be seized in tail. For example: here is a young woman---What is your name, my dear? "Dolly," answered the daughter, with a curtfy. "Here's Dolly-I feize Dolly in tail--- Dolly I feize you in tail"---" Sha't then," cried Dolly, pouting. " I am seized of land in fee--- I fettle on Dolly in tail."---Dolly, who did not comprehend the nature of the illustration, understood him in a literal fense, and in a whimpering tone exclaimed, "Sha't then, I tell thee, curfed twoad!" Tom. however, was fo transported with his fubject, that he took no notice of poor Dolly's mistake; but proceeded in his harangue upon the different kinds of tails, remainders, and seisins, when he was interrupted by a noise that alarmed larmed the whole company. The rain had been succeeded by a storm of wind, that howled around the house with the most savage impetuosity; and the heavens were overcast in fuch a manner, that not one star appeared, fo that all without was darkness and uproar. This aggravated the horror of divers loud screams. which even the noise of the blast could not exclude from the aftonished ears of our travellers. Capt. Crowe called out, " Avast, avast:" Tom Clarke fat filent, staring wildly, with his mouth still open : the furgeon himfelf feemed startled, and Ferret's countenance betrayed evident marks of confusion. The oftler moved nearer the chimney, and the good woman of the house, with her two daughters, crept close to the company.

After some pause, the Captain starting up, " These (said he) be signals of distress. Some poor souls in danger of foundering .--- Let us bear up a-head, and see if we can give them any affistance." The landlady begged

him, for Christis sake, not to think of going out; for it was a spirit that would lead him aftray into fens and rivers, and certainly do him a mischief. Crowe feemed to be staggered by this remonstrance, which his nephew reinforced, observing, that it might be a stratagem of rogues to decoy them into the fields, that they might rob them under cloud of night. Thus exhorted, he refumed his feat; and Mr. Ferret began to make very fevere strictures upon the folly and fear of those who believed and trembled at the visitation of spirits, ghosts, and goblins. He faid, he would engage with twelve penny-worth of phosphorus to frighten a whole parish out of their senses: then he expatiated on the pufillanimity of the nation in general; ridiculed the militia, censured the government; and dropped some hints about a change of hands, which the Captain could not, and the Doctor would not comprehend. Tom Clarke, from the freedom of his difcourse, concluded he was a ministerial rial fpy, and communicated his opinion to his uncle in a whisper, while this misanthrope continued to pour forth his invectives with a fluency peculiar to himself. The truth is, Mr. Ferret had been a party-writer, not from principle, but employment, and had felt the rod of power; in order to avoid a fecond exertion of which, he now found it convenient to sculk about in the country: for he had received intimation of a warrant from the fecretary of state, who wanted to be better acquainted with his person. Notwithstanding the ticklish nature of his fituation, it was become so habitual to him to think and speak in a certain manner, that even before strangers, whose principles and connexions he could not possibly know, he hardly ever opened his mouth, without uttering some direct or implied farcasm against the government. He had already proceeded a confiderable way in demonstrating, that the nation was bankrupt and beggared, and that those who stood at the

the helm were steering full into the gulph of inevitable destruction; when his lecture was fuddenly fuspended by a violent knocking at the door, which threatened the whole house with immediate demolition. Capt. Crowe, believing they should be instantly boarded, unsheathed his hanger, and stood in a posture of defence. Mr. Fillet armed himself with the poker, which happened to be red-hot: the oftler pulled down a rufty firelock, that hung by the roof, over a flitch of bacon. Tom Clarke, perceiving the landlady and her children distracted with terror, conducted them, out of meer compassion, below stairs into the cellar; and as for Mr. Ferret, he prudently withdrew into an adjoining pantry. But as a personage of great importance in this entertaining history was forced to remain some time at the door, before he could gain admittance, fo must the reader wait with patience for the next chapter, in which he will fee the cause of this difturbance turbance explained much to his comfort and edification.

CHAP. II.

In which the hero of these adventures makes his first appearance on the stage of action.

HE outward door of the Black Lion had already fustained two dreadful shocks; but at the third it flew open, and in stalked an apparition, that smote the hearts of our travellers with fear and trepidation. It was the figure of a man armed capa-pie, bearing on his shoulder a bundle dropping with water, which afterwards appeared to be the body of a man that feemed to have been drowned, and fished up from the bottom of the neighbouring river. Having deposited his burthen carefully on the floor, he addressed himself to the company in these words: " Be not furprised, good people, at this unusual appearance, which I shall take an opportunity to explain; and forgive give the rude and boisterous manner in which I have demanded, and indeed forced admittance. The violence of my intrusion was the effect of neceffity. In croffing the river, my fquire and his horse were swept away by the stream; and with some difficulty I have been able to drag him ashore, though I am afraid my affistance reached him too late: for, fince I brought him to land, he has given no figns of life." Here he was interrupted by a groan, which issued from the chest of the squire, and terrified the spectators as much as it comforted the master. After some recollection, Mr. Fillet began to undress the body, which was laid in a blanket on the floor, and rolled from fide to fide by his direction. A confiderable quantity of water being discharged from the mouth of this unfortunate squire, he uttered a hideous roar, and, opening his eyes, stared wildly around: then the furgeon undertook for his recovery; and his master went forth with the oftler in quest of the horses, which which he had left by the fide of the river. His back was no fooner turned than Ferret, who had been peeping from behind the pantry-door, ventured to rejoin the company; pronouncing with a smile, or rather grin of contempt, "Hey day! what precious mummery is this? What, are we to have the farce of Hamlet's ghoft?" "Adzooks, (cried the Captain) my kiniman Tom has dropped a-stern---hope in God a-has not bulged to, and gone to bottom." (exclaimed the misanthrope) there's no danger: the young lawyer is only feizing Dolly in tail."

Certain it is, Dolly squeaked at that instant in the cellar; and Clarke appearing foon after in fome confusion, declared she had been frightened by a flash of lightning: but this affertion was not confirmed by the young lady herself, who eyed him with a sullen regard, indicating displeasure, though not indifference; and when questioned by her mother, replied, "A-doan't

maind what a-fays, so a-doan't, vor

all his goalden jacket, then."

In the mean time the furgeon had performed the operation of phlebotomy on the squire, who was lifted into a chair, and supported by the landlady for that purpose; but he had not as yet given any fign of having retrieved the use of his senses. And here Mr. Fillet could not help contemplating, with furprize, the strange figure and accoutrements of his patient, who feemed in age to be turned of fifty. His stature was below the middle fize: he was thick, squat, and brawny, with a small protuberance on one shoulder, and a prominent belly, which, in consequence of the water he had swallowed, now strutted beyond its usual dimensions. His forehead was remarkably convex, and fo very low, that his black bushy hair descended within an inch of his nose: but this did not conceal the wrinkles of his front, which were manifold. His fmall glimmering eyes resembled those of the Hampshire porker, that turns turns up the foil with his projecting fnout. His cheeks were shrivelled and puckered at the corners, like the feams of a regimental coat as it comes from the hands of the contracter: his nose bore a strong analogy in shape to a tennis-ball, and in colour to a mulberry; for all the water of the river had not been able to quench the natural fire of that feature. His upper jaw was furnished with two long white sharp pointed teeth or fangs, such as the reader may have observed in the chaps of a wolf, or full-grown maftiff, and an anatomist would describe as a preternatural elongation of the dentes canini. His chin was fo long, so peaked, and incurvated, as to form in profile with his impending forehead the exact refemblance of a moon in the first quarter. With respect to his equipage, he had a leathern cap upon his head, faced like those worn by marines, and exhibiting in embroidery the figure of a crescent. His coat was of white cloth faced with black, and cut in a very antique fashion; and, in lieu lieu of a waistcoat, he wore a buff jerkin. His feet were cased with loose buskins, which, though they rose almost to his knee, could not hide that curvature known by the appellation of bandy legs. A large string of bandaliers garnished a broad belt that graced his shoulders, from whence depended an instrument of war, which was fomething between a back-fword and a cutlass; and a case of pistols were stuck in his girdle. Such was the figure which the whole company now furveyed with admiration. After some pause, he seemed to recover his recollection. He rolled about his eyes around, and, attentively furveying every individual, exclaimed, in a strange tone, "Bodikins! where's Gilbert?" This interrogation did not favour much of fanity, especially when accompanied with a wild stare, which is generally interpreted as a fure fign of a disturbed understanding: nevertheless, the surgeon endeavoured to affift his recollection. " Come, (faid he) have a good-heart. -How

-How do'ft do, friend?" "Do! (replied the squire) do as well as I can :- that's a lie too : I might have done better. I had no business to be here." "You ought to thank God and your master (resumed the surgeon) for the providential escape you have had." "Thank my master! (cried the squire) thank the devil! Go and teach your grannum to crack filberds. I know who I'm bound to pray for, and who I ought to curfe the longest day I have to live."

" Nay, brother, (said he) you are bound to pray for this here gentleman as your sheet-anchor: for, if so be as he had not cleared your stowage of the water you had taken in at your upper works, and lightened your veins, d'ye see, by taking away some of your blood, adad! you had driven before the gale, and never been brought up in this world again, d'ye see." "What, then you would persuade me (replied the patient) that the only way to fave my life was to fled my precious blood?

Here the Captain interpofing,

Then fixing his eyes upon Ferret, he proceeded: " An't you a limb of the law, friend? -No, I cry you mercy, you look more like a shew-man or a conjurer." -Ferret, nettled at this address, anfwered, "It would be well for you that I could conjure a little common fense into that numbscull of yours." In all probability he VOL. I. would would have descended to particulars, had not he been seized with a return of his nausea, which obliged him to call for a bumper of brandy. remedy being swallowed, the tumult in his stomach subsided. He defired he might be put to-bed without delay, and that half a dozen eggs and a pound of bacon might, in a couple of hours, be dreffed for his supper.

He was accordingly led off the fcene by the landlady and her daughter; and Mr. Ferret had just time to observe the fellow was a compofition, in which he did not know whether knave or fool most predominated, when the master returned from the stable. He had taken off his helmet, and now displayed a very engaging countenance. His age did not feem to exceed thirty: he was tall, and feemingly robust; his face long and oval, his nose aquiline, his mouth furnished with a set of elegant teeth white as the drifted fnow; his complexion clear, and his aspect noble. His chesnut hair loosely flowed in fhort short natural curls; and his grey eyes shone with such vivacity, as plainly shewed that his reason was a little difcomposed. Such an appearance prepossessed the greater part of the com-pany in his favour: he bowed round with the most polite and affable address; enquired about his squire, and, being informed of the pains Mr. Fillet had taken for his recovery, infifted upon that gentleman's accepting an handsome gratuity: then, in consideration of the cold bath he had undergone, he was prevailed upon to take the post of honour; namely, the great chair fronting the fire, which was reinforced with a billet of wood for his comfort and convenience.

Perceiving his fellow-travellers either over-awed into silence by his presence, or struck dumb with admiration at his equipage, he accosted them in these words, while an agreeable fmile dimpled on his cheek.

"The good company wonders, no doubt, to see a man cased in armour, such as hath been for above C 2 a whole

a whole century disused in this and every other country of Europe; and perhaps they will be still more furprised, when they hear that man profess himself a noviciate of that military order, which hath of old been distinguished in Great-Britain, as well as through all Christendom, by the name of Knights Errant. Yes, gentlemen, in that painful and thorny path of toil and danger I have begun my career, a candidate for honest fame; determined, as far as in me lies, to honour and affert the efforts of virtue; to combat vice in all her forms, redress injuries, chastise oppression, protect the helpless and forlorn, relieve the indigent, exert my best endeavours in the cause of innocence and beauty, and dedicate my talents, such as they are, to the fervice of my country." "What! (said Ferret) you set up for a modern Don Quixote?—The scheme is rather too stale and extravagant.-What was an humorous romance, and welltimed fatire in Spain, near two hundred dred years ago, will make but a forry jest, and appear equally insipid and absurd, when really acted from affectation, at this time a-day, in a country like England."

The Knight, eying this cenfor with a look of disdain, replied, in a solemn lofty tone: " He that from affectation imitates the extravagancies recorded of Don Quixote, is an impostor equally wicked and contemptible. He that counterfeits madness, unless he disfembles like the elder Brutus, for fome virtuous purpose, not only debases his own soul, but acts as a traitor to heaven, by denying the divinity that is within him -I am neither an affected imitator of Don Quixote, nor, as I trust in heaven, visited by that spirit of lunacy so admirably displayed in the fictitious character exhibited by the inimitable Cervantes. I have not yet encountered a windmill for a giant; nor mistaken this public house for a magnificent castle: neither do I believe this gentleman to be the constable; nor that worthy C 3 prac-practitioner to be master Elizabat, the furgeon recorded in Amadis de Gaul; nor you to be the enchanter Alquife, nor any other fage of hiftory or romance.-I fee and diffinguish objects as they are discerned and described by other men. I reafon without prejudice, can endure contradiction, and, as the company perceives, even bear impertinent cenfure without passion or resentment. I quarrel with none but the foes of virtue and decorum, against whom I have declared perpetual war, and them I will every where attack as the natural enemies of mankind." "But that war (faid the cynic) may foon be brought to a conclusion, and your adventures close in Bridewell, provided you meet with some determined constable, who will seize your worship as a vagrant, according to the statute." "Heaven and earth! (cried the stranger, starting up and laying his hand to his fword) do I live to hear myfelf insulted with such an opprobrious epithet, and refrain from trampling trampling into dust the insolent calumniator!"

The tone in which these words were pronounced, and the indignation that flashed from the eyes of the speaker, intimidated every individual of the society, and reduced Ferret to a temporary privation of all his faculties. His eyes retired within their fockets: his complexion, which was naturally of a copper hue, now shifted to a leaden colour; his teeth began to chatter; and all his limbs were agitated by a fudden palfy. The Knight observed his condition, and refumed his feat, faying, "I was to blame: my vengeance must be referved for very different objects .--Friend, you have nothing to fear-the fudden gust of passion is now blown over. Recollect yourself, and I will reason calmly on the observation you have made."

This was a very feafonable declaration to Mr. Ferret, who opened his eyes, and wiped his forehead, while the other proceeded in these terms.

C 4 " You

"You say I am in danger of being apprehended as a vagrant: I am not so ignorant of the laws of my country, but that I know the description of those who fall within the legal meaning of this odious term. You must give me leave to inform you, friend, that I am neither bearward, fencer, stroller, gipsey, mountebank, nor mendicant; nor do I practise subtle craft to deceive and impose upon the King's lieges; nor can I be held as an idle disorderly person, travelling from place to place, collecting monies by virtue of counterfeited passes, briefs, and other false pretences-In what respect therefore am I to be deemed a vagrant? Answer boldly, without fear or scruple." To this interrogation the misanthrope replied, with a faultering accent, "If not a vagrant, you incur the penalty for riding armed in affray of the peace." "But, instead of riding armed in affray of the peace, (resumed the other) I ride in preservation of the peace; and gentlemen are allowed by

by the law to wear armour for their defence. Some ride with blunderbuffes, some with pistols, some with fwords, according to their various inclinations. Mine is to wear the armour of my forefathers: perhaps I use them for exercise, in order to accustom myself to fatigue, and strengthen my constitution: perhaps I assume them for a frolick."

" But if you swagger armed and in difguise, affault me on the highway, or put me in bodily fear, for the fake of the jest, the law will punish you in earnest," (cried the other.) " But my intention (answered the Knight) is carefully to avoid all those occasions of offences." "Then (said Ferret) you may go unarmed, like other sober people." "Not so, (answered the Knight) as I propose to travel all times, and in all places, mine armour may guard me against the attempts of treachery: it may defend me in combat against odds, should I be assaulted by a multitude of plebeians, or have occasion to bring malefactors to justice." "What, then (exclaimed the philosopher) you intend to cooperate with the honourable frater-nity of thief-takers?" " I do purpose (said the youth, eying him with a look of ineffable contempt) to act as a coadjutor to the law, and even to remedy evils which the law cannot reach; to detect fraud and treafon, abase insolence, mortify pride, discourage slander, disgrace immodesty, and stigmatize ingratitude: but the infamous part of a thief-catcher's character I disclaim. I neither affociate with robbers and pickpockets, knowing them to be fuch, that, in being intrusted with their secrets, I may the more effectually betray them; nor shall I ever pocket the reward granted by the legislature to those by whom robbers are brought to conviction: but I shall always think it my duty to rid my country of that pernicious vermin, which preys upon the bowels of the commonwealth-not but that an incorporated company of licenfed thieves might, under proper regulations tions, be of fervice to the community."

Ferret, emboldened by the passive tameness with which the stranger bore his last reflection, began to think he had nothing of Hector but his outfide, and gave a loofe to all the acrimony of his party-rancour. Hearing the Knight mention a company of licensed thieves, "What else (cried he) is the majority of the nation? What is your standing army at home, that eat up their fellow subjects? What are your mercenaries abroad, whom you hire to fight their own quarrels? What is your militia, that wife measure of this fagacious m-ry, but a larger gang of petty thieves, who steal sheep and poultry through mere idleness; and were they confronted with an enemy, would steal themselves away? What is your but a knot of thieves, who pillage the nation under colour of law, and enrich themselves with the wreck of their country? When you confider the enormous debt of an hundred millions millions, the intolerable load of taxes and impositions under which we groan, and the manner in which that burthen is yearly accumulating, to support two German electorates, without our receiving any thing in return but the shews of triumph and shadows of conquest: I say, when you reflect on these circumstances, and at the same time behold our cities filled with bankrupts, and our country with beggars; can you be so infatuated as to deny that our m-y is mad, or worse than mad; our wealth exhaufted, our people miserable, our credit blasted, and our state on the brink of perdition? This prospect, indeed, will make the fainter impression, if we recollect that we ourselves are a pack of such profligate, corrupted, pufillanimous rafcals, as deferve no falvation."

The stranger, raising his voice to a loud tone, replied, "Such, indeed, are the infinuations, equally false and insidious, with which the desperate emissaries of a party endeavour to poison the minds of his Majesty's subjects, subjects, in defiance of common honeity and common fense. But he must be blind to all perception, and dead to candour, who does not fee and own that we are involved in a just and necessary war, which has been maintained on truly British principles, profecuted with vigour, and crowned with fuccess; that our taxes are easy, in proportion to our wealth; that our conquests are equally glorious and important; that our commerce flourishes, our people are happy, and our enemies reduced to despair .- Is there a man who boasts a British heart, that repines at the fuccess and prosperity of his country? Such there are, O shame to patriotism, and reproach to Great-Britain! who act as the emissaries of France both in word and writing; who exaggerate our neceffary burthens, magnify our dangers, extol the power of our enemies, deride our victories, extenuate our conquests, condemn the measures of our government, and scatter the seeds of diffatisfaction through the land. Such domestic domestic traitors are doubly the objects of detestation; first, in perverting truth; and secondly, in propagating falsehood, to the prejudice of that community of which they have professed themselves members. One of these is well known by the name of Ferret, an old, rancorous, incorrigible instrument of fedition: happy it is for him, that he has never fallen in my way; for, notwithstanding the maxims of forbearance which I have adopted, the indignation which the character of that caitiff inspires, would probably impel me to some act of violence, and I should crush him like an ungrateful viper, that gnawed the bosom which warmed it into life!"

These last words were pronounced with a wildness of look, that even bordered upon frenzy. The misanthrope once more retired to the pantry for shelter, and the rest of the guests were evidently disconcerted.

Mr. Fillet, in order to change the conversation, which was likely to produce serious consequences, expres-

fed uncommon fatisfaction at the remarks which the Knight had made, fignified his approbation of the honourable office he had undertaken: declared himself happy in having feen fuch an accomplished cavalier; and observed, that nothing was wanting to render him a complete knighterrant, but some celebrated beauty, the mistress of his heart, whose idea might animate his breaft, and ftrengthen his arm to the utmost exertion of valour: he added, that love was the foul of chivalry. The stranger started at this discourse. He turned his eyes on the furgeon with a fixed regard: his countenance changed: a torrent of tears gushed down his cheeks: his head funk upon his bofom: he heaved a profound figh; and remained in filence with all the external marks of unutterable forrow. The company were in some measure infected by his despondence; concerning the cause of which, however, they would not venture to inquire.

By this time the landlady, having disposed of the squire, desired to know, with many curtises, if his honour would not chuse to put off his wet garments; assuring him, that she had a very good feather-bed at his service, upon which many gentlevolks of the virst quality had lain; that the sheets were well aired; and that Dolly should warm them for his worship with a pan of coals. This hospitable offer being repeated, he seemed to wake from a trance of grief; arose from his seat, and, bowing courteously to the company, withdrew.

Captain Crowe, whose faculty of speech had been all this time absorbed in amazement, now broke into the conversation with a volley of interjections: "Split my snatchblock!—Odd's firkin!—Splice my old shoes!—I have sailed the salt seas, brother, since I was no higher than the Triton's taffril—east, west, north, and south, as the saying is—Blacks, Indians, Moors, Morattos, and Seapoys;—but, smite my timbers! such a man of war-" Here he was interrupted by his nephew Tom Clarke, who had disappeared at the Knight's first entrance, and now produced himself with an eagerness in his look, while the tears started in his eyes .- "Lord bless my foul! (cried he) I know that gentleman, and his fervant, as well as I know my own father .- I am his own godson, uncle: he stood for me when he was a boy—yes, indeed, Sir, my father was steward to the estate— I may fay I was bred up in the family of Sir Everhard Greaves, who has been dead these two years—this is the only son, Sir Launcelot; the best-natured, worthy, generous gentleman -I care not who knows it: I love him as well as if he was my own flesh and blood-"

At this period Tom, whose heart was of the melting mood, began to sob and weep plenteously, from pure affection. Crowe, who was not very subject to these tendernesses, damned him for a chicken-hearted lubber; repeating, with much peevishness, "What do'st do'st cry for? What do'st cry for, noddy?" The surgeon, impatient to know the story of Sir Launcelot, which he had heard imperfectly recounted, begged that Mr. Clarke would compose himself, and relate it as circumstantially as his memory could retain the particulars; and Tom, wiping his eyes, promised to give him that satisfaction; which the reader, if he be so minded, may partake in the next chapter.

CHAP. III.

Which the reader, on perusal, may wish were chapter the last.

THE Doctor prescribed a repetatur of the julep, and mixed the ingredients secundem artem; Tom Clarke hemmed thrice, to clear his pipes; while the rest of the company, including Dolly and her mother, who had by this time administred to the knight, composed themselves into earnest and humed attention. Then the young lawyer began his narration to this effect:—" I tell ye what, gemmen, I don't pretend in this here case to flourish and harangue like a-having never been called to-but what of that, d'ye fee?-perhaps I may know as much as-Facts are facts, as the faying is.—I shall tell, repeat, and relate a plain story-matters of fact, d'ye see, without rhetoric, oratory, ornament, or embellishment; without repetition, tautology, circumlocution, or going about the bush: facts which I shall aver, partly on the testimony of my own knowledge, and partly from the information of responsible evidences of good repute and credit, any circumstance known to the contrary notwithstanding:-for, as the law faith, if fo be as how there is an exception to evidence, that exception is in its nature but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, and exceptio in non exceptis, firmat regulam, d'ye see.-But, howsomever, in regard to this here affair, we need not be so scrupulous as if we were pleading before a judge fedente curia-

Ferret,

Ferret, whose curiofity was rather more eager than that of any other person in this audience, being provoked by this preamble, dashed the pipe he had just filled in pieces against the grate; and after having pro-nounced the interjection pift, with an acrimony of aspect altogether peculiar to himself, " If (said he) impertinence and folly were felony by the statute, there would be no want of unexceptionable evidence to hang fuch an eternal babbler." " Anan, babbler! (cried Tom, reddening with passion, and starting up) I'd have you to know, Sir, that I can bite as well as babble; and that, if I am fo minded, I can run upon the foot after my game without being in fault, as the faying is; and which is more, I can shake an old fox by the collar."

How far this young lawyer might have proceeded to prove himself staunch on the person of the misanthrope, if he had not been prevented, we shall not determine; but the whole company were alarmed at his looks

looks and expressions. Dolly's rosy cheeks assumed an ash-colour, while the ran between the disputants, crying, "Naay, naay-vor the love of God doant then, doan't then!" But captain Crowe exerted a parental authority over his nephew, faying, Avast, Tom, avast !--- Snugg's the word-we'll have no boarding, d'ye fee .- Haul forward thy chair again, take thy berth, and proceed with thy story in a direct course, without yawing like a Dutch yanky."

Tom, thus tutored, recollected himself, resumed his seat, and, after fome pause, plunged at once into the current of narration. "I told you before, gemmen, that the gentleman in armour was the only fon of Sir Everhard Greaves, who poffeffed a free estate of five thousand a year in our county, and was respected by all his neighbours, as much for his perfonal merit as for his family fortune. With respect to his son Launcelot, whom you have feen, I can remember nothing until he returned from the university, university, about the age of seventeen, and then I myself was not more than ten years old. The young gemman was at that time in mourning for his mother; though God he knows, Sir Everhard had more cause to rejoice than to be afflicted at her death :for, among friends, (here he lowered his voice, and looked round the kitchen) she was very whimsical, expenfive, and ill-tempered, and, I'm afraid, a little—upon the—flighty order-a little touched or fo ;-but mum for that—the lady is now dead; and it is my maxim, de mortuis nil nisi bonum. The young squire was even then very handsome, and looked remarkably well in his weepers: but he had an aukward air and shambling gait, stooped mortally, and was so shy and filent, that he would not look a stranger in the face, nor open his mouth before company. Whenever he spied a horse or carriage at the gate, he would make his escape into the garden, and from thence into the park; where many's the

the good time and often he has been found fitting under a tree, with a book in his hand, reading Greek, Latin, and other foreign linguas.

Sir Everhard himself was no great scholar, and my father had forgot his claffical learning; and fo the rector of the parish was defired to examine young Launcelot. It was a long time before he found an opportunity: the fquire always gave him the flip.-At length the parson catched him in bed of a morning, and, locking the door, to it they went tooth and nail. What passed betwixt them the Lord in heaven knows; but, when the Doctor came forth, he looked wild and haggard as if he had feen a ghost, his face as white as paper, and his lips trembling like an afpen-leaf. " Parfon, (faid the knight) what is the matter?—how do'ft find my fon? I hope he won't turn out a ninny, and difgrace his family." The Doctor, wiping the sweat from his forehead, replied, with some hesitation, " he could not tell—he hoped the best the the fquire was to be fure a very extraordinary young gentleman"-But the father urging him to give an explicit answer, he frankly declared, that, in his opinion, the fon would turn out either a mirrour of wisdom, or a monument of folly: for his genius and disposition were altogether preternatural. The knight was forely vexed at this declaration, and fignified his displeasure by saying, the doctor, like a true priest, dealt in mysteries and oracles, that would admit of different and indeed contrary interpretations. He afterwards confulted my father, who had ferved as steward upon the estate for above thirty years, and acquired a confiderable share of his favour. "Will. Clarke, (faid he, with tears in his eyes) what shall I do with this unfortunate lad? I would to God he had never been born; for I fear he will bring my grey hairs with forrow to the grave. When I am gone, he will throw away the estate, and bring himself to infamy and ruin by keeping company pany with rooks and beggars.—O Will! I could forgive extravagance in a young man; but it breaks my heart to fee my only fon give such repeated proofs of a mean spirit and fordid disposition!"

Here the old gentleman shed a flood of tears, and not without some shadow of reason. By this time Launcelot was grown fo referved to his father, that he feldom faw him, or any of his relations, except when he was in a manner forced to appear at table, and there his bashfulness feemed every day to encrease. On the other hand, he had formed fome very strange connexions. Every morning he visited the stable, where he not only converfed with the grooms and helpers, but scraped acquaintance with the horses: he fed his favourites with his own hand, stroaked, caressed, and rode them by turns; till at last they grew fo familiar, that, even when they were a-field at grafs, and faw him at a distance, they would toss their manes, whinny like fo many Vol. I. colts colts at fight of the dam, and, galloping up to the place where he flood, fmell him all over .- You must know that I myself, though a child, was his companion in all these excurfions. He took a liking to me on account of my being his godson, and gave me more money than I knew what to do with: he had always plenty of cash for the asking, as my father was ordered to supply him liberally, the knight thinking that a command of money might help to raise his thoughts to a proper confideration of his own importance. He never could endure a common beggar, that was not either in a state of infancy or of old age: but, in other respects, he made the guineas fly in such a manner, as looked more like madness than generosity. He had no communication with your rich yeomen; but rather treated them and their families with studied contempt, because forsooth they pretended to assume the dress and manners of the gentry: they kept their footmen, their

their faddle-horses, and chaises: their wives and daughters appeared in their jewels, their filks, and their fattins, their negligees and trollopees: their clumfy shanks, like so many shins of beef, were cased in filk-hose and embroidered slippers: their raw red fingers, gross as the pipes of a chamber-organ, which had been employed in milking the cows, in twirling the mop or churn-staff, being adorned with diamonds, were taught to thrum the pandola, and even to touch the keys of the harpfichord: nay, in every village they kept a rout and fet up an affembly; and in one place a hog-butcher was master of the ceremonies. I have heard Mr. Greaves ridicule them for their vanity and aukward imitation; and therefore, I believe, he avoided all concerns with them, even when they endeavoured to engage his attention. It was the lower fort of people with whom he chiefly converfed, fuch as ploughmen, ditchers, and other daylabourers. To every cottager in the D 2 parish parish he was a bounteous benefactor. He was, in the literal sense of the word, a careful overseer of the poor; for he went from house to house, industriously inquiring into the distresses of the people. He repaired their huts, cloathed their backs, filled their bellies, and supplied them with necessaries for exercising their industry and different occupations.

I'll give you one instance now, as a specimen of his character. He and I, strolling one day on the fide of a common, saw two boys picking hips and haws from the hedges, one feemed to be about five, and the other a year older: they were both barefoot and ragged; but at the same time fat, fair, and in good condition. "Who do you belong to?" (faid Mr. Greaves.) " To Mary Stile, (replied the oldeft) the widow that rents one of them housen." " And how do'ft live, my boy? Thou lookest fresh and jolly;" resumed the squire. "Lived well enough till yesterday," answered the child. " And pray what happened yesterday, yesterday, my boy?" continued Mr. Greaves. " Happened! (faid he) why, mammy had a coople of little Welch keawes, that gi'en milk enough to fill all our bellies; mammy's, and mine, and Dick's here, and my two little fifters at hoam: yesterday the squire seized the keawes for rent, God rot'un! Mammy's gone to bed fick and fulky: my two fifters be crying at hoam vor vood; and Dick and I be come hither to pick haws and bullies."--My godfather's face grew red as scarlet: he took one of the children in either hand, and leading them towards the house, found Sir Everhard talking with my father before the gate. Instead of avoiding the old gentleman, as ufual, he brushed up to him with a spirit he had never shewn before, and presenting the two ragged boys, "Surely, Sir, (faid he) you will not countenance that there ruffian your steward, in oppressing the widow and the fatherless. On pretence of distraining for D 3 the the rent of a cottage, he has robbed the mother of these and other poor infant-orphans of two cows, which afforded them their whole fuftenance. Shall you be concerned in tearing the hard-earned morfel from the mouth of indigence? Shall your name, which has been fo long mentioned as a bleffing, be now detefted as a curse by the poor, the helpless, and forlorn? The father of these babes was once your game-keeper, who died of a consumption caught in your fervice. -- You fee they are almost naked-I found them plucking haws and floes, in order to appease their hunger .- The wretched mother is starving in a cold cottage, distracted with the cries of other two infants, clamorous for food; and while her heart is burfting with anguish and despair, she invokes heaven to avenge the widow's cause upon the head of her unrelenting landlord!"

This unexpected address brought tears into the eyes of the good old gentleman. "Will Clarke, (said he to my father) how durst you abuse my authority at this rate? You who know I have been always a protector, not an oppressor of the needy and unfortunate. I charge you, go immediately and comfort this poor woman with immediate relief: instead of her own cows, let her have two of the best milch cows of my dairy: they shall graze in my parks in fummer, and be foddered with my hay in winter. -- She shall fit rent-free for life; and I will take care of these her poor orphans." This was a very affecting scene. Mr. Launcelot took his father's hand and kiffed it, while the tears ran down his cheeks; and Sir Everhard embraced his fon with great tenderness, crying, "My dear boy! God be praised for having given you such a feeling heart." My fathed thingfelf was moved, thof a practive out of the law, and confequently world to distresses.-He declared, that he had given no directions to diffrain; and that the bailiff must have donit by his own authority.-" If that be the case (said the young squire) let the inhuman rafcal be turned out of our fervice."

Well, gemmen, all the children were immediately cloathed and fed, and the poor widow had well night run distracted with joy. The old knight, being of a humane temper himself, was pleased to see such proofs of his fon's generofity: he was not angry at his fpending his money, but at squandering away his time among the dregs of the people. For you must know, he not only made matches, portioned poor maidens, and fet up young couples that came together without money; but he mingled in every rustic diversion, and bore away the prize in every contest. He excelled every swain of that district in feats of strength and activity; in leaping, running, wrestling, cricket, cudgel-playing, and pitching the bar; and was confessed to be, out of fight, the best dancer at all wakes and holidays: happy happy was the country-girl who could engage the young fquire as her partner! To be fure it was a comely fight for to see as how the buxom country-lasses, fresh and fragrant, and blushing like the rose, in their best apparel dight, their white hose, and clean short dimity petticoats, their gaudy gowns of printed cotton; their top-knots, kiffingstrings, and stomachers, bedizened with bunches of ribbons of various colours, green, pink, and yellow; to fee them crowned with garlands, and affembled on May-day, to dance before squire Launcelot, as he made his morning's progress through the village. Then all the young peafants made their appearance with cockades, fuited to the fancies of their feveral fweet-hearts, and boughs of flowering hawthorn. The children sported about like flocks of frisking lambs, or the young fry fwarming under the funny bank of fome meandering river. The old men and women, in their holiday-D 5 garments, garments, stood at their doors to receive their benefactor, and poured forth bleffings on him as he paffed: the children welcomed him with their shrill shouts; the damsels with fongs of praise; and the young men with the pipe and tabor marched before him to the May-pole, which was bedecked with flowers and bloom. There the rural dance began: a plentiful dinner, with oceans of good liquor, was bespoke at the White Hart: the whole village was regaled at the fquire's expence; and both the day and the night was spent in mirth and pleasure. Lord help you! he could not rest if he thought there was an aching heart in the whole parish. Every paultry cottage was in a little time converted into a pretty fnug, comfortable habitation, with a wooden porch at the door, glass casements in the windows, and a little garden behind well stored with greens, roots, and fallads. In a word, the poor's rate was reduced to a meer trifle, and one

one would have thought the golden age was revived in Yorkshire. But, as I told you before, the old knight could not bear to fee his only fon fo wholly attached to these lowly pleafures, while he industriously shunned all opportunities of appearing in that fuperior fphere to which he was defigned by nature and by fortune. He imputed his conduct to meanness of spirit, and advised with my father touching the properest expedient to wean his affections from fuch low-born pursuits. My father counselled him to fend the young gentleman up to London, to be entered as a student in the Temple, and recommended to the superintendance of some person who knew the town, and might engage him infenfibly in fuch amusements and connexions, as would foon lift his ideas above the humble objects on which they had been hitherto employed. This advice appeared fo falutary, that it was followed without the least hesitation. The young squire himself was perfectly well fa-D 6 tisfied tisfied with the proposal, and in a few days fet out for the great city: but there was not a dry eye in the parish at his departure, although he prevailed upon his father to pay in his absence all the pensions he had granted to those who could not live on the fruit of their own industry. In what manner he spent his time at London, it is none of my business to inquire; thof I know pretty well what kind of lives are led by gemmen of your Inns of Court.-I myfelf once belonged to Serjeant's Inn, and was perhaps as good a wit and a critick as any Templar of them all. Nay, as for that matter, thof I defpise vanity, I can aver with a safe conscience, that I had once the honour to belong to the fociety called the Town: we were all of us attorneys clerks, gemmen, and had our meetings at an ale-house in Butcherrow, where we regulated the diverfions of the theatre.

But to return from this digreffion: Sir Everhard Greaves did not feem to be very well pleased with the conduct of his fon at London. He got notice of some irregularities and scrapes into which he had fallen; and the fquire feldom wrote to his father, except to draw upon him for money, which he did so fast, that in eighteen months the old gemman loft all patience.

At this period squire Darnel chanced to die, leaving an only daughter, a minor, heiress of three thousand a year, under the guardianship of her uncle Anthony, whose brutal character all the world knows. The breath was no fooner out of his brother's body than he resolved, if possible, to succeed him in parliament as representative for the borough of Ashenton. Now you must know, that this borough had been for many years a bone of contention between the families of Greaves and Darnel; and at length the difference was compromised by the interposition of friends, on condition that Sir Everhard and Squire Darnel should alternately represent present the place in parliament. They agreed to this compromise for their mutual convenience; but they were never heartily reconciled. Their political principles did not tally; and their wives looked upon each other as rivals in fortune and magnificence: fo that there was no intercourse between them, thof they lived in the fame neighbourhood. On the contrary, in all disputes, they constantly headed the opposite parties. Sir Everhard understanding that Anthony Darnel had begun to canvass, and was putting every iron in the fire, in violation and contempt of the pactum familiæ before mentioned, fell into a violent passion, that brought on a fevere fit of the gout, by which he was disabled from giving personal attention to his own interest. My father, indeed, employed all his diligence and address, and spared neither money, time, nor conflitution, till at length he drank himself into a consumption, which was the death of him. But, after all, there is a great difference between between a steward and a principal. Mr. Darnel attended in propria persona, flattered and careffed the women, feasted the electors, hired mobs, made processions, and scattered about his money in fuch a manner, that our friends durst hardly shew their heads in public.

At this very crifis our young fquire, to whom his father had writ an account of the transaction, arrived unexpectedly at Greavesbury-hall, and had a long private conference with Sir Everhard. The news of his return spread like wild-fire thro' all that part of the country: bonfires were made, and the bells fet a ringing in feveral towns and steeples; and next morning above seven hundred people were assembled at the gate, with music, flags and streamers, to welcome their young fquire, and accompany him to the borough of Ashenton. He set out on foot with this retinue, and entered one end of the town just as Mr. Darnel's mob had come in at the other. Both arrived about the same time at the

the market-place; but Mr. Darnel, mounting first into the balcony of the town-house, made a long speech to the people in favour of his own pretentions, not without fome invidious reflections glanced at Sir Ever-hard, his competitor. We did not much mind the acclamations of his party, which we knew had been hired for the purpose: but we were in some pain for Mr. Greaves, who had not been used to speak in public. He took his turn however in the balcony, and, uncovering his head, bowed all round with the most engaging courtefy. He was dreffed in a green frock trimmed with gold, and his own dark hair flowed about his ears in natural curls, while his face was overspread with a blush, that improved the glow of youth to a deeper crimfon, and I dare fay fet many a female heart a palpitating. When he made his first appearance, there was just such a humming and clapping of hands as you may have heard when the celebrated Garrick comes comes upon the stage in King Lear, or King Richard, or any other top character. But how agreeably were we disappointed, when our young gentleman made fuch an oration as would not have difgraced a Pitt, an Egmont, or a Murray! While he spoke, all was hushed in admiration and attention-you could have almost heard a feather drop to the ground. It would have charmed you to hear with what modesty he recounted the services which his father and grandfather had done to the corporation; with what eloquence he expatiated upon the shameful infraction of the treaty subsisting between the two families; and with what keen and spirited strokes of satire he retorted the farcasms of Darnel. He no fooner concluded his harangue, than there was fuch a burst of applause as feemed to rend the very sky. Our musick immediately struck up; our people advanced with their enfigns, and, as every man had a good cudgel, broken heads would have enfued, fued, had not Mr. Darnel and his party thought proper to retreat with uncommon dispatch. He never offered to make another public entrance, as he faw the torrent ran fo violently against him; but fat down with his loss, and withdrew his opposition, though at bottom extremely mortified and incenfed. Sir Everhard was unanimously elected, and appeared to be the happiest man upon earth; for, besides the pleafure arising from his victory over this competitor, he was now fully fatisfied that his fon, instead of difgracing, would do honour to his family. It would have moved a heart of stone. to fee with what a tender transport of paternal joy he received his dear Launcelot, after having heard of his deportment and fuccess at Athenton; where, by the bye, he gave a ball to the ladies, and displayed as much elegance and politeness as if he had been bred at the court of Versailles.

This joyous feafon was of thort duration: in a little time all the happiness piness of the family was overcast by a fad incident, which hath left fuch an unfortunate impression upon the mind of the young gentleman, as, I am afraid, will never be effaced. Mr. Darnel's niece and ward, the great heiress, whose name is Aurelia, was the most celebrated beauty of the whole country—if I faid the whole kingdom, or indeed all Europe, perhaps I should barely do her justice. I don't pretend to be a limner, gemmen; nor does it become me to delineate fuch excellence: but furely I may presume to repeat from the play;

" O! the is all that painting can express,

" Or youthful poets fancy when they love!

At that time she might be about feventeen, tall and fair, and fo exquifitely shaped-you may talk of your Venus de Medicis, your Dianas, your Nymphs, and Galateas; but if Praxiteles, and Roubillac, and -Wilton, were to lay their heads together, in order to make a complete pattern of beauty, they would hardly reach her model of perfection .--As for complexion, poets will talk of blending the lily with the rose, and bring in a parcel of fimiles of cowslips, carnations, pinks, and daifies.-There's Dolly, now, has got a very good complexion: --- indeed, she's the very picture of health and innocence.—You are, indeed, my pretty lass; but parva componere magnis. Miss Darnel is all amazing beauty, delicacy, and dignity! Then the foftness and expression of her fine blue eyes; her pouting lips of coral hue; her neck, that rifes like a tower of polished alabaster between two mounts of fnow .- I tell you what, gemmen, it don't fignify talking: if e'er a one of you was to meet this young lady alone, in the midst of a heath or common, or any unfrequented place, he would down on his knees, and think he kneeled before some supernatural being. I'll tell tell you more: she not only resembles an angel in beauty, but a faint in goodness, and an hermit in humility; --- lo void of all pride and affectation; fo foft, and fweet, and affable, and humane! Lord! I could tell fuch instances of her charity !-Sure enough, the and Sir Launcelot were formed by nature for each other: howsoever, the cruel hand of fortune hath intervened, and severed them for ever. Every foul that knew them both, faid it was a thousand pities but they should come together, and extinguish in their happy union the mutual animofity of the two families. which had fo often embroiled the whole neighbourhood. Nothing was heard but the praises of miss Aurelia Darnel and Mr. Launcelot Greaves: and no doubt the parties were prepoffessed, by this applause, in favour of each other. At length, Mr. Greaves went one Sunday to her parish-church; but, though the greater part of the congregation watched their looks, they could not perceive that she took the least notice of him; or that he seemed to be struck with her appearance. He afterwards had an opportunity of feeing her, more at leifure, at the York-affembly, during the races; but this opportunity was productive of no good effect, because he had that fame day quarrelled with her uncle on the turf .- An old grudge, you know, gemmen, is foon inflamed to a fresh rupture. It was thought Mr. Darnel came on purpose to shew his resentment. They differed about a bet upon Miss Cleverlegs, and, in the course of the dispute, Mr. Darnel called him a petulant boy. The young squire, who was as hasty as gunpowder, told him he was man enough to chastise him for his insolence; and would do it on the fpot, if he thought it would not interrupt the diversion. In all probability they would have come to points immediately, had not the gentlemen interposed; fo that nothing further passed, but abundance of foul language on the part of

Mr. Anthony, and a repeated defiance

to fingle combat.

Mr. Greaves, making a low bow, retired from the field; and in the evening danced at the affembly with a young lady from the Bishoprick, feemingly in good temper and spirits, without having any words with Mr. Darnel, who was also present. But in the morning he visited that proud neighbour betimes; and they had almost reached a grove of trees on the north-fide of the town, when they were fuddenly overtaken by half a dozen gentlemen, who had watched their motions. It was in vain for them to dissemble their defign, which could not now take effect. They gave up their pistols, and a reconciliation was patched up by the preffing remonstrances of their common friends; but Mr. Darnel's hatred still rankled at bottom, and foon broke out in the fequel. About three months after this transaction, his niece Aurelia, with her mother, having stondore what he perceived ing ing been to visit a lady in the chariot, the horses being young, and not used to the traces, were startled at the braying of a jack-ass on the common, and taking fright, ran away with the carriage like lightning. The coachman was thrown from the box, and the ladies screamed piteously for help. Mr. Greaves chanced to be a horse-back on the other fide of an inclosure. when he heard their shrieks; and riding up to the hedge, knew the chariot, and faw their difaster. The horses were then running full speed in fuch a direction, as to drive headlong over a precipice into a stonequarry, where they and the chariot, and the ladies, must be dashed in pieces. You may conceive, gemmen, what his thoughts were when he faw fuch a fine young lady, in the flower of her age, just plunging into eternity; when he faw the lovely Aurelia on the brink of being precipitated among rocks, where her delicate limbs must be mangled and tore afunder; when he perceived that, before the tragedy would be finished. The sence was so thick and high, slanked with a broad ditch on the outside, that he could not hope to clear it, although he was mounted on Scipio, bred out of Miss Cowslip, the sire Muley, and his grandsire the samous Arabian Mustapha.—Scipio was bred by my father, who would not have taken a hundred guineas for him from any other person but the young squire.—Indeed, I have heard my poor father say"—

By this time Ferret's impatience was become so outrageous, that he exclaimed in a furious tone, "Damn your sather, and his horse, and his colt into the bargain!"

Tom made no reply; but began to strip with great expedition. Captain Crowe was so choaked with passion, that he could utter nothing but disjointed sentences: he rose from his seat, brandished his horsewhip, and seizing his nephew by the collar, cried, "Odd's heartlikins! sirrah, I have a good mind—Devil sire your running Vol. I. E tackle, fleer without all this tacking hither and thither, and the Lord knows whither?——'Noint my block! I'd give thee a rope's end for thy supper, if it wan't"——

Dolly had conceived a fneaking kindness for the young lawyer, and thinking him in danger of being roughly handled, flew to his relief. She twisted her hand in Crowe's neckcloth without ceremony, crying, "Sha't then, I tell thee, old coger.—Who kears a vig vor thy voolish trantrums?"

While Crowe looked black in the face, and ran the risque of strangulation under the gripe of this amazon, Mr. Clarke having disengaged himself of his hat, wig, coat, and waist-coat, advanced in an elegant attitude of manual offence towards the misanthrope, who snatched up a gridiron from the chimney-corner, and Discord seemed to clap her sooty wings in expectation of battle.—But as the reader may have more than once already of this chapter, we must postpone to the next opportunity the incidents that succeeded this denunciation of war.

CHAPIV.

In which it appears that the Knight, when heartily set in for sleeping, was not easily disturbed.

I N all probability the kitchen of the Black Lion, from a domestic temple of fociety, and good-fellowship, would have been converted into a scene or stage of sanguinary dispute, had not Pallas or Discretion interposed in the person of Mr. Fillet, and with the affistance of the hostler disarmed the combatants not only of their arms, but also of their resentment. The impetuofity of Mr. Clarke was a little checked at fight of the gridiron, which Ferret brandished with uncommon dexterity; a circumstance from whence the company were, upon reflexion, induced to believe, that E 2 that before he plunged into the fea of politicks, he had occasionally figured in the character of that facetious droll, who accompanies your itinerant physicians, under the familiar appellation of Merry Andrew, or Jack-Pudding, and on a wooden stage entertains the populace with a folo on the falt-box, or a fonnata on the tongs and gridiron. Be that as it may, the young lawyer feemed to be a little difcomposed at the glancing of this extraordinary weapon of offence, which the fair hands of Dolly had scoured, until it shone as bright as the shield of Achilles; or as the emblem of good old English fare, which hangs by a red ribbon round the neck of that thrice-honoured fage's head, in velvet bonnet cased, who presides by rotation at the genial board, distinguished by the title of the Beef-stake Club: where the delicate rumps irrefistibly attract the stranger's eye, and, while they feem to cry "Come cut me-come cut me," constrain, by wondrous fympathy, each mouth 'to to overflow: where the obliging and humorous Jemmy B—t, the gentle Billy H—d, replete with human kindness, and the generous Johnny B—d, respected and beloved by all the world, attend as the priests and ministers of Mirth, good Cheer, and Jollity, and affist with culinary art the raw, unpractised, aukward guest.

But, to return from this digreffive fimile: the hoftler no fooner flept between those menacing antagonists than Tom Clarke very quietly re-fumed his cloaths, and Mr. Ferret refigned the gridiron without further question. The doctor did not find it quite fo easy to release the throat of Capt. Crowe from the masculine grasp of the virago Dolly, whose fingers could not be difengaged until the honest seaman was almost at the last gasp. After some pause, during which he panted for breath, and untied his neckcloth, " Damn thee, for a brimstone galley (cried he); I was never fo grappled withal fince I knew a card from E 3 a coma compass. Adzooks! the jade has so taughtened my rigging, d'ye fee, that I Snatch my bowlings, if I come athwart thy hawfer, I'll turn thy keel upwards or mayhap fet thee a-driving under thy bare poles I will-I will, you hell-fire, faucy-I will." while I as he do Do'ly made no reply; but feeing Mr. Clarke fit down again with great composure, took her station likewise at the opposite side of the apartment. Then Mr. Fillet requested the lawyer to proceed with his story, which, after three hems, he accordingly profecuted in these words.

1 told you, gemmen, that Mr. Greaves was mounted on Scipio, when he faw miss Darnel and her mother in danger of being hurried over a precipice. Without reflecting a moment he gave Scipio the fpur, and at one fpring he cleared five and twenty feet, over hedge and ditch, and every obstruction. Then he rode full speed, in order to turn the coach-horses; and, finding them quite - faunte quite wild and furious, endeavoured to drive against the counter of the hither horse, which he missed, and flaked poor Scipio won the pole of the coach. The shock was so great, that the coach-horfes made a full stop within ten yards of the quarry, and Mr. Greaves was thrown forwards towards the coach-box, which mounting with admirable dexterity, he feized the reins before the horses could recover of their fright. At that instant the coachman came running up, and loofed them from the traces with the utmost dispatch. Mr. Greaves had now time to give his attention to the ladies, who were well nigh distracted with fear. He no fooner opened the chariot-door than Aurelia, with a wildness of look, fprung into his arms; and, clasping him round the neck, fainted away. I leave you to guess, gemmen, what were his feelings at this inftant. The mother was not fo discomposed, but that she could contribute to the recovery of her daughter, whom the young fquire E 4

At length the retrieved the use of her senses, and perceiving the situation in which she was, the blood revisited her face with a redoubled glow, while she desired him to set her down upon the turf.

" Mrs. Darnel, far from being fly or referved in her compliments of acknowledgments, kissed Mr. Launcelot without ceremony, the tears of gratitude running down her cheeks: she called him her dear son, her generous deliverer, who, at the hazard of his own life, had faved her and her child from the most dismal fate that could be imagined. Mr. Greaves was so much transported on this occasion, that he could not help disclosing a passion, which he had hitherto industriously concealed. "What I have done (said he) was but a common office of humanity, which I would have performed for any of my fellow-creatures: but, for the preservation of mis Aurelia Darnel, I would at any time facrifice my life with pleafure.'

fure." The young lady did not hear this declaration unmoved: her face was again flushed, and her eyes sparkled with pleasure: nor was the youth's confession disagreeable to the good lady her mother, who at one glance perceived all the advantages of such an union between the two families.

"Mr. Greaves proposed to send the coachman to his father's stable for a pair of fober horses, that could be depended upon, to draw the ladies home to their own habitation; but they declined the offer, and chose to walk, as the distance was not great. He then infifted upon his being their conductor; and, each taking him under the arm, supported them to their own gate, where fuch an apparition filled all the domestics with astonishment. Mrs. Darnel, taking him by the hand, led him into the house, where she welcomed him with another affectionate embrace, and indulged him with an ambrofial kifs of Aurelia, saying, " But for you, we had both been by this time in eternity. Sure it was heaven that Sent you as an angel to our affistance!" She kindly inquired if he had himfelf fustained any damage in adminifiring that desperate remedy to which they owed their lives. She entertained him with a small collation; and, in the course of the conversation, lamented the animofity which had so long divided two neighbouring families of fuch influence and character. He was not flow in fignifying his approbation of her remarks, and expressing the most eager defire of feeing all those unhappy differences removed: in a word, they parted with mutual fatisfaction.

"Just as he advanced from the outward gate, on his return to Greavesbury-hall, he was met by Anthony Darnel on horseback, who riding up to him with marks of surprize and refentment, saluted him with "Your servant, Sir.—Have you any commands for me?" The other replying with an air of indifference, "None at all," Mr. Darnel asked, what had cured him the honour of a visit. The young gentleman, perceiving by the manner in which he spoke that the old quarrel was not yet extinguished, answered, with equal disdain, that the vifit was not intended for him; and that, if he wanted to know the cause of it, he might inform himself by his own fervants. "So I shall (cried the uncle of Aurelia); and perhaps let you know my fentiments of the matter-" "Hereafter as it may be," faid the youth; who, turning out of the avenue, walked home, and made his father acquainted with the particulars of this adventure.

"The old gentleman chid him for his rashness; but seemed pleased with the success of his attempt, and still more so, when he understood his sentiments of Aurelia, and the deportment of the ladies. A many mid of "Next day the son sent over a servant with a compliment, to enquire about their health; and the messenger, being seen by Mr. Darnel, was told that the ladies were indisposed, E 6 and

and did not chuse to be troubled with meffages. The mother was really seized with a fever, produced by the agitation of her spirits, which every day became more and more violent, until the physicians despaired of her life. Believing that her end approached, she sent a trusty servant to Mr. Greaves, defiring that the might fee him without delay; and he immediately fet out with the meffenger, who introduced him in the dark. He found the old lady in bed, almost exhausted, and the fair Aurelia fitting by her, overwhelmed with grief, her lovely hair in the utmost disorder, and her charming eyes inflamed with weeping. The good lady beckoning Mr. Launcelot to approach, and directing all the attendants to quit the room, except a favourite maid, from whom I learned the story, she took him by the hand, and fixing her eyes upon him with all the fondness of a mother, shed some tears, in filence, while the fame marks of forrow trickled down his cheeks. After

After this affecting pause, of My dear fon (faid the), Oh! that I could have lived to fee you so indeed ! you find me hastening to the goal of life"- Here the tender-hearted Aurelia, being unable to contain herself longer, broke out into a violent passion of grief, and wept aloud. The mother, waiting patiently till she had thus given vent to her anguish, calmly intreated her to refign herself submiffively to the will of heaven: then turning to Mr. Launcelot, "I had indulged (faid she) a fond hope of feeing you allied to my family.—This is no time for me to infift upon the ceremonies and forms of a vain world,-Aurelia looks upon you with the eyes of tender prepossession." No sooner had the pronounced these words than he threw himself on his knees before the young lady, and, preffing her hand to his lips, breathed the foftest expressions which the most delicate love could fuggeft. "I know (refumed the mother) that your passion is mutually fincere; and I should die satisfied, if I thought your union would not be opposed: but that violent man, my brother-in-law, who is Aurelia's sole guardian, will thwart her wishes with every obstacle that brutal resentment and implacable malice can contrive. Mr. Greaves, I have long admired your virtues, and am confident that I can depend upon your honour.--You shall give me your word, that, when I am gone, you will take no steps in this affair without the concurrence of your father; and endeayour, by all fair and honourable means, to vanquish the prejudices, and obtain the confent of her uncle : the rest we must leave to the dispenfation of Providence."

" The squire promised, in the most folemn and fervent manner, to obey all her injunctions, as the last dictates of a parent whom he should never cease to honour. Then she favoured them both with a great deal of salutary advice, touching their conduct before and after marriage; and prefented him with a ripg, as a memorial of her affection:

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 87

affection: at the same time he pulled another off his singer, and made a tender of it as a pledge of his love to Aurelia, whom her mother permitted to receive this token. Finally, he took a last sarewel of the good matron, and returned to his father with the particulars of this interview.

"In two days Mrs. Darnel departed this life, and Aurelia was removed to the house of a relation, where her grief had like to have proved fatal to her constitution.

"In the mean time, the mother was no sooner committed to the earth than Mr. Greaves, mindful of her exhortations, began to take measures for a reconciliation with the guardian. He engaged several gentlemen to interpose their good offices; but they always met with the most mortifying repulse: and at last Anthony Darnel declared, that his hatred to the house of Greaves was hereditary, habitual, and unconquerable. He swore he would spend his heart's blood to perpetuate the quarrel; and that, sooner than than his niece should match with young Launcelot, he would facrifice her with his own hand. The young gentleman, finding his prejudice fo rancorous and invincible, left off making any further advances; and, fince he found it impossible to obtain his confent, resolved to cultivate the good graces of Aurelia, and wed her in despite of her implacable guardian. He found means to establish a literary correspondence with her, as soon as her grief was a little abated; and even to effect an interview, after her return to her own house: but he soon had reason to repent of this indulgence. The uncle entertained spies upon the young lady, who gave him an account of this meeting; in consequence of which she was suddenly hurried to fome distant part of the country, which we never could discover.

"It was then we thought Mr. Launcelot a little disordered in his brain, his grief was fo wild, and his paffion so impetuous. He refused all fustenance, neglected his person, renounced nounced his amusements, rode out in the rain, sometimes bare headed, strolled about the fields all night, and became so peevish, that none of the domesticks durst speak to him, without the hazard of broken bones. Having played these pranks for about three weeks, to the unspeakable chagrin of his father, and the astonishment of all that knew him, he suddenly grew calm, and his good humour returned. But this, as your sea-faring people say, was a deceitful calm, that soon ushered in a dread-ful storm.

"He had long fought an opportunity to tamper with some of Mr. Darnel's servants, who could inform him of the place where Aurelia was confined; but there was not one about the samily who could give him that satisfaction: for the persons who accompanied her, remained as a watch upon her motions, and none of the other domestics were privy to the transaction. All attempts proving fruitless, he could no longer restain his impatience; but throw-throwing himself in the way of the uncle, upbraided him in fuch harsh terms, that a formal challenge enfued. They agreed to decide their difference without witnesses; and one morning, before fun-rife, met on that very common where Mr. Greaves had faved the life of Aurelia. The first pistol was fired on each side without any effect; but Mr. Darnel's second wounded the young fquire in the flank: nevertheless, having a pistol in referve, he defired his antagonist to ask his life. The other, instead of fubmitting, drew his fword; and Mr. Greaves, firing his piece into the air, followed his example. The contest then became very hot, tho' of short continuance. Darnel being difarmed at the first onset, our young squire gave him back the fword, which he was base enough to use a second time against his conqueror. Such an instance of repeated ingratitude and brutal ferocity divested Mr. Greaves of his temper and forbearance. He attacked Mr. Anthony with great fury, and

and at the first longe ran him up to the hilt, at the same time seizing with his left hand the shell of his enemy's fword, which he broke in disdain. Mr. Darnel having fallen, the other immediately mounted his horfe, which he had tied to a tree before the engagement; and riding full speed to Ashenton, sent a surgeon to Antho-ny's assistance. He asterwards ingenuoufly confessed all these particulars to his father, who was overwhelmed with confernation, for the wounds of Darnel were judged mortal; and as no perfor had feen the particulars of the duel, Mr. Launcelot might have been convicted of murder.

"On these considerations, before a warrant could be served upon him, the old knight, by dint of the most eager intreaties, accompanied with marks of horror and despair, prevailed upon his son to withdraw himself from the kingdom, until such time as the storm should be overblown. Had his heart been unengaged, he would have chose to travel; but at this period, when

when his whole foul was engroffed and fo violently agitated by his passion for Aurelia, nothing but the fear of feeing the old gentleman run diftracted, would have induced him to defift from the pursuit of that young lady far less quit the kingdom where she, resided. Well then, gemmen, he repaired to Harwich, where he embarked for Holland, from whence he proceeded to Bruffels, where he procured a pass-port from the French king, by virtue of which he travelled to Marseilles, and there took a tartan for Genoa. The first letter fir Everhard received from him was dated at Florence. Mean while the furgeon's prognostic was not altogether verified. Mr. Darnel did not die immediately of his wounds; but he lingered a long time, as it were in the arms of death, and even partly recovered: yet, in all probability, he will never be wholly restored to the enjoyment of his health; and is obliged every fummer to attend the hot well at Briftol. As his wounds began to heal, his hatred to Mr. Greaves rehen

Greaves seemed to revive with augmented violence; and he is now, if possible, more than ever determined against all reconciliation. Mr. Launcelot, after having endeavoured to amuse his imagination with a succession of curious objects, in a tour of Italy, took up his residence at a town called Pisa; and there fell into a deep melancholy, from which nothing could rouse him but the news of his father's death.

" The old gentleman (God rest his foul) never held up his head after the departure of his darling Launcelot; and the dangerous condition of Darnel kept up his apprehension: this was reinforced by the obstinate filence of the youth, and certain accounts of his difordered mind, which he had received from fome of those persons who take pleafure in communicating difagreeable tidings. A complication of all these grievances, co-operating with a fevere fit of the gout and gravel, produced a fever, which in a few days brought fir Everhard to his long home; after

after he had settled his affairs with heaven and earth, and made his peace with God and man. I'll affure you, gemmen, he made a most edifying and christian end: he died regretted by all his neighbours except Anthony, and might be said to be embalmed by the tears of the poor, to whom he was always a bounteous benefactor. Look

"When the fon, now fir Launcelot, came home, he appeared so meagre, wan, and hollow-eyed, that the fervants hardly knew their young master. His first care was to take possesfion of his fortune, and fettle accounts with the steward who had succeeded my father. These affairs being discuffed, he spared no pains to get intelligence concerning miss Darnel; and foon learned more of that young lady than he defired to know; for it was become the common talk of the country, that a match was agreed upon between her and young squire Sycamore, a gentleman of a very great fortune. These tidings were probably confirmed under her own hand, in a letter which the wrote to fir Launcelot. The contents were never exactly known but to the parties themselves: nevertheless, the effects were too visible; for, from that bleffed moment, he spoke not one word to any living creature for the space of three days: but was feen fometimes to shed a flood of tears, and fometimes to burst out into a fit of laughing. At last he broke filence, and feemed to wake from his disorder. He became more fond than ever of the exercise of riding, and began to amuse himself again with acts of benevolence. One instance of his generosity and justice deserves to be recorded in brass or marble: you must know, gemmen, the rector of the parish was lately dead, and fir Everhard had promifed the prefentation to another clergyman. In the mean time, fir Launcelot chancing one Sunday to ride through a lane, perceived a horse saddled and bridled feeding on the fide of a fence; and casting his eyes around, beheld on the other fide of the hedge an object lying extended on the ground, which he took to be the body of a murdered traveller. He forthwith alighted; and, leaping into the field, descried a man at full length wrapped in a great coat, and writhing in agony. Approaching nearer, he found it was a clergyman, in his gown and caffock. When he inquired into the case, and offered his affistance, the stranger rose up, thanked him for his courtefy, and declared that he was now very well. The knight, who thought there was fomething mysterious in this incident, expressed a defire to know the cause of his rolling in the grass in that manner; and the clergyman, who knew his person, made no scruple in gratifying his curiofity. "You must know, fir, faid he, I ferve the curacy of your own parish, for which the late incumbent payed me twenty pounds a year; but this fum being scarce sufficient to maintain my wife and children, who are five in number, I agreed to read prayers in the afternoon at another church church about four miles from hence: and for this additional duty I receive ten pounds more: as I keep a horse, it was formerly an agreeable exercise rather than a toil; but of late years I have been afflicted with a rupture, for which I confulted the most eminent operators in the kingdom; but I have no cause to rejoice in the effects of their advice, though one of them affured me I was completely cured. The malady is now more troublesome than ever, and often comes upon me fo violently while I am on horfeback, that I am forced to alight, and lie down upon the ground, until the caufe of the diforder can for the time be reduced."

Sir Launcelot not only condoled with him upon his misfortune, but defired him to throw up the second cure, and he would pay him ten pounds a year out of his own pocket. Your generosity consounds me, good sir: (cried the clergyman) and yet I ought not to be surprised at any instance of benevolence in fir Launcelot Greaves;

Vol. 1. F

but I will check the fulness of my heart. I shall only observe, that your good intention towards me can hardly take effect. The gentleman, who is to fucceed the late incumbent, has given me notice to quit the premises, as he hath provided a friend of his own for the curacy." "What! (cried the knight) does he mean to take your bread from you, without affigning any other reason?" "Surely, fir, replied the ecclesiastic, I know of no other reason. I hope my morals are irreproachable, and that I have done my duty with a conscientious regard: I may venture an appeal to the parishioners among whom I have lived these seventeen years. After all, it is natural for every man to favour his own friends in preference to strangers. As for me, I propose to try my fortune in the great city; and I doubt not but providence will provide for me and my little ones." To this declaration Sir Launcelot made no reply; but riding home set on foot a strict enquiry into the character of this man, whose name name was Jenkins. He found that he was a reputed scholar, equally remarkable for his modesty and good life; that he visited the sick, assisted the needy, compromised disputes among his neighbours, and fpent his time in fuch a manner as would have done honour to any christian divine. Thus informed, the knight fent for the gentleman to whom the living had been promised, and accosted him to this effect : "Mr. Tootle, I have a favour to ask of you. The person who serves the cure of this parish, is a man of good character, beloved by the people, and has a large family. I shall be obliged to you if you will continue him in the curacy." The other told him he was forry he could not comply with his request, being that he had already promifed the curacy to a friend of his own." matter: (replied Sir Launcelot) fince I have not interest with you, I will endeavour to provide for Mr. Jenkins in some other way."

That same afternoon he walked over to the curate's house, and told him that he had spoken in his behalf to Dr. Tootle, but the curacy was preengaged. The good man having made a thousand acknowledgments for the trouble his honour had taken; " I have not interest sufficient to make you curate, (faid the knight) but I can give you the living itself, and that you shall have." So saying, he retired; leaving Mr. Jenkins incapable of uttering one fyllable, so powerfully was he struck with this unexpected turn of fortune. The presentation was immediately made out; and in a few days Mr. Jenkins was put in poffession of his benefice, to the inexpreffible joy of the congregation. Hitherto every thing went right, and every unprejudiced person commended the knight's conduct : but, in a little time, his generofity seemed to overleap the bounds of discretion; and even in some cases might be thought tending to a breach of the king's peace. For example, he compelled, vi & armis, a rich farmer's fon to marry the daughter of a cottager, whom the young fellow had debauched. Indeed it feems there was a promise of marriage in the case, though it could not be legally afcertained. The wench took on dismally; and her parents had recourse to Sir Launcelot, who, sending for the delinquent, expostulated with him severely on the injury he had done the young woman, and exhorted him to fave her life and reputation by performing his promise; in which case he (Sir Launcelot) would give her three hundred pounds to her portion. Whether the farmer thought there was fomething interested in this uncommon offer, or was a little elevated by the consciousness of his father's wealth; he rejected the proposal with rustic disdain, and said, if so be as how the wench would fwear the child to him, he would fettle it with the parish: but declared, that no squire in the land should oblige him to buckle with fuch a cracked pitcher. F 3 This

102 The ADVENTURES of

This resolution, however, he could not maintain: for, in less than two hours, the rector of the parish had direction to publish the banns, and the ceremony was performed in due course.

Now, though we know not precisely the nature of the arguments that were used with the farmer, we may conclude they were of the minatory species; for the young fellow could not, for fome time, look any person in the face. The knight acted as the general redresser of grievances. If a woman complained to him of being ill treated by her husband, he first inquired into the foundation of the complaint; and if he found it just, catechifed the defendant. If the warning had no effect, and the man proceeded to fresh acts of violence; then his judge took the execution of the law in his own hand, and horfewhipped the party. Thus he involved himself in several law-suits, that drained him of pretty large sums of money. He feemed particularly incenfed cenfed at the least appearance of oppreffion; and supported divers poor tenants against the extortion of the landlords. Nay, he has been known to travel two hundred miles as a volunteer; to offer his affiftance in the cause of a person, who he heard was by chicanery and oppression wronged of a confiderable estate. He accordingly took her under his protection, relieved her diffresses, and was at a vast expence in bringing the suit to a determination; which being unfavourable to his client, he refolved to bring an appeal into the house of lords, and certainly would have executed his purpose, if the gentlewoman had not died in the interim." interior

At this period Ferret interrupted the narrator, by observing that the said Greaves was a common nusance, and ought to be prosecuted on the statute of barretry. "No, sir, (resumed Mr. Clarke) he cannot be convicted of barretry, unless he is always at variance with some person or other, a mover of suits and quarrels, who distrupts turbs the peace under colour of law. Therefore he is in the indictment stiled, Communis malefactor, calumniator & seminator litium. " Prithee, truce with thy definitions, (cried Ferret) and make an end of thy longwinded story. Thou hast no title to be so tedious, until thou comest to have a coif in the court of common pleas." Tom fmiled contemptuous, and had just opened his mouth to proceed, when the company were disturbed by a hideous repetition of groans, that feemed to iffue from the chamber in which the body of the fquire was deposited. The landlady inatched the candle, and ran into the room, followed by the doctor and the rest; and this accident naaturally sufpended the narration. In like manner we shall conclude the chapter, that the reader may have time to breathe, and digest what he has already heard.

CHAP. V.

In which this recapitulation draws to a close.

WHEN the landlady entered the room from whence the groaning proceeded, she found the squire lying on his back under the dominion of the night-mare, which rode him fo hard, that he not only groaned and fnorted, but the fweat ran down his face in streams. The perturbation of his brain, occasioned by this pressure, and the fright he had lately undergone, gave rife to a very terrible dream, in which he fancied himself apprehended for a robbery. The horror of the gallows was strong upon him, when he was fuddenly awaked by a violent shock from the doctor; and the company broke in upon his view, still perverted by fear, and bedimmed by flumber. His dream was now realized by a full persuasion that he was furrounded by the conftable and his gang. The first object that F 5 pre-presented itself to his disordered view was the figure of Ferret, who might very well have passed for the finisher of the law: against him therefore the first effort of his despair was directed. He started upon the floor; and seizing a certain utenfil, that shall be nameless, launched it at the misanthrope with fuch violence, that, had he not cautiously slipped his head aside, it is supposed that actual fire would have been produced from the collision of two fuch hard and folid fubstances. All future mischief was prevented by the strength and agility of captain Crowe, who, springing upon the asfailant, pinioned his arms to his fides, crying, "O damn ye, if you are for running a-head, I'll foon bring you to your bearings." The squire thus restrained, soon recollected himself, and gazing upon every individual in the apartment, " Wounds! (said he) I've had an ugly dream. I thought, for all the world, they were carrying me to Newgate, and that there was Jack Ketch coom to vetch me before my taim." Ferret, who was the person he had thus distinguished, eying him with a look of the most emphatic malevolence, told him, it was very natural for a knave to dream of Newgate; and that he hoped to fee the day when this dream would be found a true prophecy, and the commonwealth purged of all fuch rogues and vagabonds: but it could not be expected that the vulgar would be honest and conscientious, while the great were diftinguished by profligacy and corruption. The squire was disposed to make a practical reply to this infinuation, when Mr. Ferret prudently withdrew himself from the scene of altercation. The good woman of the house persuaded his antagonist to take out his nap, affuring him that the eggs and bacon, with a mug of excellent ale, should be forthcoming in due sea-The affair being thus fortunately adjusted, the guests returned to the kitchen, and Mr. Clarke resumed his story to this effect. "You'll please to take notice, gemmen, that befides the F 6 inwith favourable circumstances, he would not insert the name of one who could not procure a guinea for the fee; and the poor fellow, who had only stole an hour-glass out of a shoemaker's window, was actually executed after a long respite; during which he had been permitted to go abroad, and earn his subsistence by his daily labour.

"Sir Launcelot, being informed of this barbarous act of avarice, and having some ground that bordered on the lawyer's estate, not only rendered him contemptible and infamous, by exposing him as often as they met on the grand jury, but also, being verted with the property of the great tythes, proved fuch a troublesome neighbour, fometimes by making waste among his hay and corn, fometimes by inftituting fuits against him for petty trefpasses, that he was fairly obliged to quit his habitation, and remove into another part of the kingdom. All these avocations could not divert Sir Launcelot from the execution of a wild scheme, which has carried his extravagance to such a pitch, that I am afraid if a statute-you understand me, gemmen, were sued, the jury would-I don't choose to explain myself further on this circumstance. Be that as it may, the fervants at Greavesbury-hall were not a little confounded, when their master took down from the family armoury a compleat fuit of armour, which had belonged to his great grandfather, Sir Marmaduke Greaves, a great warrior, who lost his life in the service of his king. This armour being fcoured, repaired, and altered, so as to fit Sir Launcelot, a certain knight, whom I don't choose to name, because I believe he cannot be proved compos mentis, came down feemingly on a visit, with two attendants; and, on the eve of the festival of St. George, the armour being carried into the chapel, Sir Launcelot (Lord have mercy upon us!) remained all night in that difmal place, alone and without light, though it was confidently reported all over the country, that the place was haunted by the spirit of his great great uncle, who, being lunatic, had cut his throat from ear to ear, and was found dead on the communion table."

It was observed, that while Mr. Clarke rehearsed this circumstance, his eyes began to stare, and his teeth to chatter; while Dolly, whose looks were fixed invariably on this narrator, growing pale, and hitching her joint-stool nearer the chimney, exclaimed in a frightened tone, "Moother, moother, in the neame of God, look to 'un! how a quakes! as I'm a pre-precious faoul, a looks as if a faw fomething." Tom forced a smile, and thus proceeded:

"While Sir Launcelot tarried within the chapel, with the doors all locked, the other knight stalked round and round it on the outfide, with his fword drawn, to the terror of divers persons who were present at the ceremony. As foon as day broke he opened one of the doors, and, going in to Sir Launcelot, read a book for fome time, which we did suppose to be the constitutions of knight-errantry: then we heard a loud flap which ecchoed through the whole chapel, and the stranger pronounce with an audible and folemn voice, "In the name of God, St. Michael, and St. George, I dub thee knight-be faithful, bold, and fortunate." You cannot imagine, gemmen, what an effect this strange ceremony had upon the people who were affembled. They gazed at one another in filent horror; and, when Sir Launcelot came forth completely armed, took to their heels in in a body, and fled with the utmost precipitation. I myself was overturned in the crowd; and this was the case with that very individual perfon who now ferves him as a squire. He was so frightened that he could not rife, but lay roaring in fuch a manner, that the knight came up, and gave him a thwack with his launce across the shoulders, which roused him with a vengeance. For my own part, I freely own I was not altogether unmoved at feeing fuch a figure come stalking out of a church in the grey of the morning; for it recalled to my remembrance the idea of the ghost in Hamlet, which I had feen acted in Drury-lane, when I made my first trip to London; and I had not yet got rid of the impression.

"Sir Launcelot, attended by the other knight, proceeded to the stable; from whence, with his own hands, he drew forth one of his best horses, a fine mettlesome sorrel, who had got blood in him, ornamented with rich trappings. In a trice the two knights, and the other two strangers, who now appeared to be trumpeters, were mounted. Sir Launcelot's armour was lacquered black; and on his shield was represented the moon in her first quarter, with the motto impleat orbem. The trumpets having founded a charge, the stranger pronounced with a loud voice, "God preferve this gallant knight in all his honourable atchievements; and may he long continue to press the sides of his now adopted steed, which I denominate Bronzomarte, hoping that he will rival in swiftness and spirit Bayardo, Brigliadoro, or any other steed of past or present chivalry? After another flourish of the trumpets, all four clapped spurs to their horses, Sir Launcelot couching his launce, and galloped to and fro, as if they had been mad, to the terror and astonishment of all the spectators. What should have induced our knight to choose this here man for his squire, is not easy to determine; for, of all the fervants about the house, he was the least likely either ther to please his master, or engage in fuch an undertaking. His name is Timothy Crabshaw, and he acted in the capacity of whipper-in to Sir Everhard. He afterwards married the daughter of a poor cottager, by whom he has feveral children, and was employed about the house as a ploughman and carter. To be fure the fellow has a dry fort of humour about him: but he was univerfally hated among the fervants for his abusive tongue and perverse disposition, which often brought him into trouble; for though the fellow is as strong as an elephant, he has no more courage naturally than a chicken-I fay naturally, because, fince his being a member of knight-errantry, he has done some things that appear altogether incredible and præternatural.

and

"Timothy kept such a bawling, after he had received the blow from Sir Launcelot, that every body on the field thought some of his bones were broken; and his wife, with five bantlings, came snivelling to the knight, who

who ordered her to fend the hufband directly to his house. Tim accordingly went thither, - groaning piteously all the way, creeping along with his body bent like a Greenland canoe. As foon as he entered the court, the outward door was shut; and Sir Launcelot coming down stairs with a horsewhip in his hand, asked what was the matter with him that he complained fo dismally? To this question he replied, that it was as common as duck-weed in his country, for a man to complain when his bones were broke." "What should have broke your bones?" faid the knight. " I cannot guess, (answered the other) unless it was that delicate switch that your honour in your mad pranks handled so dextrously upon my carcase." Sir Launcelot then told him, there was nothing fo good for a bruise as a fweat, and he had the remedy in his hand. Timothy eying the horsewhip askance, observed that there was another still more speedy; to wit, a moderate pill of lead, with a sufficient cient dose of gun-powder. "No, rascal, (cried the knight) that must be referved for your betters." So faying, he employed the instrument so effectually, that Crabshaw soon forgot his fractured ribs, and capered about with great agility. When he had been disciplined in this manner to fome purpose, the knight told him he might retire; but ordered him to return next morning, when he should have a repetition of the medicine, provided he did not find himfelf capable of walking in an erect posture. The gate was no fooner thrown open, than Timothy ran home with all the speed of a grey-hound, and corrected his wife, by whose advice he had pretended to be so grievously damaged in his person. No body dreamed that he would next day present himself at Greavesbury-hall; nevertheless, he was there very early in the morning, and even closetted a whole hour with Sir Launcelot. He came out making wry faces, and feveral times flapped himfelf on the fore-head, crying, "Bodikins!

kins! thof he be creazy, I an't, that I an't!" When he was asked what was the matter, he faid, he believed the devil had got in him, and he should never be his own man again. That same day the knight carried him to Ashenton, where he bespoke those accoutrements which he now wears; and while these were making, it was thought the poor fellow would have run distracted. He did nothing but growl, and curfe, and fwear to himfelf, run backwards and forwards between his own hutt and Greavesburyhall, and quarrel with the horses in the stable. At length his wife and family were removed into a fnug farmhouse that happened to be empty, and care taken that they should be comfortably maintained.

"These precautions being taken, the knight, one morning, at day-break, mounted Bronzomarte, and Crabshaw as his squire, ascended the back of a clumsy cart-horse, called Gilbert. This again was looked upon as an instance of insanity in the said faid Crabshaw; for, of all the horses in the stable, Gilbert was the most stubborn and vicious, and had often like to have done a mischief to Timothy while he drove the cart and plough. When he was out of humour he would kick and plunge as if the devil was in him. He once thrust Crabshaw into the middle of a quickfet-hedge, where he was terribly torn; another time he canted him over his head into a quagmire, where he stuck with his heels up, and must have perished if people had not been passing that way; a third time he seized him in the stable with his teeth by the rim of the belly, and fwung him off the ground, to the great danger of his life; and I'll be hanged if it was not owing to Gilbert that Crabshaw was now thrown into the river. Thus mounted and accoutred, the knight and his squire set out on their first excursion. They turned off from the common highway, and travelled all that day without meeting any thing worth recounting: but, in the morning of the

fecond day, they were favoured with an adventure. The hunt was upon a common, through which they travelled, and the hounds were in full cry after a fox, when Crabshaw, prompted by his own mischievous disposition, and neglecting the order of his master, who called aloud to him to defift, rode up to the hounds, and croffed them at full gallop. huntsman, who was not far off, running towards the squire, bestowed upon his head fuch a memento with his pole, as made the landschape dance before his eyes; and in a twinkling he was furrounded by all the foxhunters, who plied their whips about his ears with infinite agility. Sir Launcelot advancing at an easy pace, instead of affisting the disastrous squire, exhorted his adversaries to punish him feverely for his infolence, and they were not flow in obeying this injunction. Crabshaw finding himself in this disagreeable situation, and that there was no fuccour to be expected from his master, on whose prowess he had had depended, grew desperate; and, clubbing his whip, laid about him with great fury, wheeling about Gilbert, who was not idle; for he, having received some of the favours intended for his rider, both bit with his teeth, and kicked with his heels; and at last made his way through the ring that incircled him, though not before he had broke the huntsman's leg, lamed one of the best horses on the field, and killed half a fcore of the hounds. Crabshaw seeing himfelf clear of the fray, did not tarry to take leave of his master, but made the most of his way to Greavesbury-hall, where he appeared hardly with any vestige of the human countenance, so much had he been defaced in this adventure. He did not fail to raise a great clamour against Sir Launcelot, whom he curfed as a coward in plain terms, swearing he would never ferve him another day: but whether he altered his mind on cooler reflection, or was lectured by his wife, who well understood her own interest, he rose with

with the cock, and went again in quest of Sir Launcelot, whom he found on the eve of a very hazardous enterprize. In the midst of a lane the knight happened to meet with a party of about forty recruits, commanded by a ferjeant, a corporal, and a drummer, which last had his drum flung at his back; but feeing fuch a strange figure mounted on a high-spirited horse, he was seized with an inclination to divert his company. With this view he braced his drum, and, hanging it in its proper position, began to beat a point of war, advancing under the very nose of Bronzomarte; while the corporal exclaimed, "Damn my eyes, who have we got here? old king Stephen, from the horse armoury, in the Tower; or the fellow that rides armed at my lord mayor's shew." The knight's fleed seemed at least as well pleased with the found of the drum as were the recruits that followed it; and fignified his fatisfaction in some curvettings and caprioles, which did not at VOL. I.

all discompose the rider, who, addressing himself to the serjeant, "Friend, faid he, you ought to teach your drummer better manners. I would chaftife the fellow on the spot for his infolence, were it not out of the respect I bear to his majesty's service." "Respect mine a-! (cried this ferocious commander) what, d'ye think to frighten us with your pewter pisspot on your scull, and your lacquer'd potlid on your arm? get out of the way and be damned, or I'll raise with my halbert such a clutter upon your target, that you'll remember it the longest day you have to live." At that instant, Crabshaw arriving upon Gilbert, "So rascal, said Sir Launcelot, you are returned. Go and beat in that scoundrel's drum-head."

"The squire, who saw no weapons of offence about the drummer but a sword, which he hoped the owner durst not draw; and being refolved to exert himself in making atonement for his desertion, advanced to execute his master's orders: but Gilbert,

Gilbert, who liked not the noise, refused to proceed in the ordinary way. Then the squire turning his tail to the drummer, he advanced in a retrograde motion, and with one kick of his heels, not only broke the drum into a thousand pieces, but laid the drummer in the mire, with fuch a blow upon his hip-bone, that he halted all the days of his life. The recruits, perceiving the discomfiture of their leader, armed themselves with stones; the serjeant raised his halbert in a posture of defence, and immediately a severe action enfued. By this time, Crabshaw had drawn his sword, and begun to lay about him like a devil incarnate; but, in a little time, he was faluted by a volley of stones, one of which knocked out two of his grinders, and brought him to the earth, where he had like to have found no quarter; for the whole company crowded about him, with their cudgels brandished; and perhaps he owed his preservation to their their preffing fo hard that they hindered one another from using their weapons. Sir Launcelot, feeing with indignation the unworthy treatment his fquire had received, and scorning to stain his launce with the blood of plebeians, instead of couching it in the rest, seized it by the middle, and fetching one blow at the serjeant, broke in twain the halbert which he had raised as a quarter-staff for his defence. The fecond stroke encountered his pate, which being the hardest part about him, sustained the shock without damage; but the third, lighting on his ribs, he honoured the giver with immediate proftration. The general being thus overthrown, Sir Launcelot advanced to the relief of Crabshaw, and handled his weapon fo effectually, that the whole body of the enemy were disabled or routed, before one cudgel had touched the carcass of the fallen squire. As for the corporal, instead of standing by his commanding officer, he had overleaped the hedge, and run to the constable of an adjoining village for affistance. Accordingly, before Crabshaw could be properly remounted, the peace officer arrived with his posse; and by the corporal was charged with Sir Launcelot and his squire, as two highwaymen. The constable, astonished at the martial figure of the knight, and intimidated at fight of the havock he had made, contented himfelf with flanding at a distance, displaying the badge of his office, and reminding the knight that he represented his majesty's person. Sir Launcelot, seeing the poor man in great agitation, affured him that his defign was to enforce, not violate the laws of his country; and that he and his fquire would attend him to the next justice of the peace; but, in the mean time, he, in his turn, charged the peaceofficer with the serjeant and the drummer, who had begun the fray. The justice had been a pettifogger, and was a fycophant to a nobleman in the neighbourhood, who had a post at court.

court. He therefore thought he should oblige his patron, by shewing his respect for the military; and treated our knight with the most boorish insolence; but refused to admit him into his house, until he had furrendered all his weapons of offence to the constable. Sir Launcelot and his squire being found the aggreffors, the justice infisted upon making out their mittimus, if they did not find bail immediately; and could hardly be prevailed upon to agree that they should remain at the house of the constable, who, being a publican, undertook to keep them in fafe custody, until the knight could write to his steward. Mean while he was bound over to the peace; and the serjeant with his drummer were told they had a good action against him for affault and battery, either by information or indictment. They were not, however, fo fond of the law as the justice seemed to be. Their fentiments had taken a turn in favour of Sir Launcelot, during the course course of his examination, by which it appeared that he was really a gentleman of fashion and fortune; and they resolved to compromise the affair without the intervention of his worship. Accordingly, the serjeant repaired to the constable's house, where the knight was lodged; and humbled himself before his honour, protesting with many oaths, that if he had known his quality he would have beaten the drummer's brains about his ears, for prefuming to give his honour or his horse the least disturbance; thof the fellow, he believed, was fufficiently punished in being a cripple for life. Sir Launcelot admitted of his apologies; and taking compassion on the fellow who had fuffered so severely for his folly, refolved to provide for his maintenance. Upon the representation of the parties to the justice, the warrant was next day discharged; and the knight returned to his own house, attended by the serjeant and the drummer mounted on horseback, the G 4 recruits

charge.

" The halberdeer found the good effects of Sir Launcelot's liberality; and his companion being rendered unfit for his majesty's service by the heels of Gilbert, is now entertained at Greavesbury-hall, where he will probably remain for life. As for Crabshaw, his master gave him to understand, that if he did not think him pretty well chaftised for his prefumption and flight by the difcipline he had undergone in the last two adventures, he would turn him out of his service with disgrace. Timothy faid he believed it would be the greatest favour he could do him to turn him out of a service in which he knew he should be rib-roasted every day, and murdered at last. In this fituation were things at Greavefbury-hall about a month ago, when I croffed the country to Ferry-bridge, where I met my uncle: probably, this is the first incident of their second excursion; for the distance between this

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 129 this here house and Sir Launcelot's estate, does not exceed fourscore or ninety miles."

CHAP. VI.

In which the reader will perceive that in some cases madness is catching.

MR. Clarke having made an end of his narrative, the surgeon thanked him for the entertainment he had received; and Mr. Ferret shrugged up his shoulders in filent disapprobation. As for captain Crowe, who used at such pauses to pour in a broadfide of difmembered remarks. linked together like chain-shot, he fpoke not a fyllable for some time; but, lighting a fresh pipe at the candle, began to roll fuch voluminous clouds of smoke as in an instant filled the whole apartment, and rendered himself invisible to the whole company. Though he thus shrouded himself from their view, he did not long remain concealed from their hearing. They first heard a strange diffonant G 5

dissonant cackle, which the doctor knew to be a sea-laugh, and this was followed by an eager exclamation of "Rare pastime, strike my yards and top-masts !-I've a good mind-why shouldn't-many a losing voyage I've -fmite my taffrel but I wool-" By this time, he had relaxed fo much in his fumigation, that the tip of his nose and one eye reappeared; and as he had drawn his wig forwards fo as to cover his whole forehead, the figure that now faluted their eyes was much more ferocious and terrible than the fire-breathing chimæra of the antients. Notwithstanding this dreadful appearance, there was no indignation in his heart; but, on the contrary, an agreeable curiofity, which he was determined to gratify. Addressing himself to Mr. Fillet, "Prithee, doctor (said he) can'ft tell, whether a man, without being rated a lord or a baron, or what d'ye call um, d'ye fee, mayn't take to the highway in the way of a frolick, d'ye see ?-adad! for my own part, part, brother, I'm resolved as how to cruise a bit in the way of an arrant—if so be as I can't at once be commander, mayhap I may be bore upon the books as a petty officer or the like, d'ye fee."

" Now, the Lord forbid! (cried Clarke with tears in his eyes) I'd rather fee you dead than brought to fuch a dilemma." " Mayhap thou would'st (answered the uncle); for then, my lad, there would be fome picking-aha! do'ft thou tip me the traveller, my boy"---Tom affured him he scorned any fuch mercenary views. "I am only concerned (said he) that you should take any step that might tend to the difgrace of yourself or your family; and I say again I had rather die than live to fee you reckoned any otherwise than compos"---and be damned! you shambling, halftimber'd fon of a-- (cried the choleric Crowe) do'ft talk to me of keeping a reckoning and compass!-I could keep a reckoning, and box G 6 my my compass, long enough before thy keelstone was laid Sam Crowe is not come here to ask thy counsel how to steer his course"-" Lord, fir, (refumed the nephew) confider what people will fay-all the world will think you mad"-" Set thy heart at ease, Tom, (cried the seaman) I'll have a trip to and again in this here channel. Mad! what then? I think for my part one half of the nation is mad-and the other not very found-I don't see why I han't as good a right to be mad as another manbut, doctor, as I was faying, I'd be bound to you, if you would direct me where I can buy that same tackle that an arrant must wear. As for the matter of the long pole headed with iron, I'd never defire a better than a good boat hook; and I could make a special good target of that there tin sconce that holds the candle-mayhap any blacksmith will hammer me a scull-cap, d'ye see, out of an old brass kettle: and I can call my horse by the name of my ship, which was Mufti. The

The furgeon was one of those wags who can laugh inwardly, without exhibiting the least outward mark of mirth or fatisfaction. He at once perceived the amusement which might be drawn from this strange disposition of the failor, together with the most likely means which could be used to divert him from fuch an extravagant pursuit. · He therefore tipped Clarke the wink with one fide of his face. while the other was very gravely turned to the captain, whom he addressed to this effect: " It is not far from hence to Sheffield, where you might be fitted compleatly in half-a-daythen you must wake your armour in church or chappel, and be dubbed. As for this last ceremony, it may be performed by any perfon whatfoever. Don Quixote was dubbed by his landlord; and there are many instances on record, of errants obliging and compelling the next person they met to cross their shoulders, and dub them knights. I myself would undertake to be your godfather; and

I have interest enough to procure the keys of the parish church that stands hard by; besides, this is the eve of St. Martin, who was himself a knighterrant, and therefore a proper patron to a noviciate. I wish we could borrow Sir Launcelot's armour for the occasion."

Crowe, being struck with this hint, started up, and laying his fingres on his lips to enjoin filence, walked off foftly on his tiptoes, to liften at the door of our knight's apartment, and judge whether or not he was asleep. Mr. Fillet took this opportunity to tell his nephew, that it would be in vain for him to combat this humour with reafon and argument: but the most effectual way of diverting him from the plan of knight-errantry would be, to frighten him heartily while he should keep his vigil in the church. Towards the accomplishment of which purpose he craved the affistance of the misanthrope as well as the nephew. Clarke feemed to relish the scheme; and observed that his uncle, though endued with courage enough to face any human danger, had at bottom a strong fund of superstition, which he had acquired, or at least improved, in the course of a sea-life. Ferret, who perhaps would not have gone ten paces out of his road to fave Crowe from the gallows, nevertheless, engaged as an auxiliary, merely in hope of feeing a fellow-creature miserable; and even undertook to be the principal agent in this adventure. For this office, indeed, he was better qualified than they could have imagined: in the bundle which he kept under his great coat, there was, together with divers noftrums, a small vial of liquid phosphorus, sufficient, as he had already obferved, to frighten a whole neighbourhood out of their fenses. In order to concert the previous measures, without being overheard, these confederates retired with a candle and lanthorn into the stable; and their backs were scarce turned, when captain Crowe came in loaded with pieces of the knight's armour, which he had conveyed from the apartment of Sir Launcelot, whom he had left fast asleep.

Understanding that the rest of the company were gone out for a moment, he could not refift the inclination he felt of communicating his intention to the landlady, who, with her daughter, had been too much engaged in preparing Crabshaw's supper, to know the purport of their conversation. The good woman, being informed of the captain's defign to remain alone all night in the church, began to oppose it with all her rhetorick. She faid it was fetting his Maker at defiance, and a wilful running into temptation. She affored him all the country knew that the church was haunted by spirits and hobgoblins: that lights had been feen in every corner of it; and a tall woman in white had one night appeared upon the top of the tower: that dreadful thrieks were often heard to come from the fouth aile, where a murdered man had been buried: that the herfelf had feen the cross on the steeple

ple all a-fire; and one evening as she passed a horse-back close by the stile at the entrance into the church-yard, the horse stood still, sweating and trembling, and had no power to proceed until she had repeated the Lord's Prayer.

These remarks made a strong impression on the imagination of Crowe, who asked, in some confusion, if the had got that same prayer in print. She made no answer; but reaching the prayer-book from a shelf, and turning up the leaf, put it into his hand: then the captain, having adjusted his spectacles, began to read or rather spell aloud with equal eagerness and solemnity. He had refreshed his memory fo well as to remember the whole: when the doctor, returning with his companions, gave him to understand that he had procured the key of the chancel, where he might watch his armour as well as in the body of the church; and that he was ready to conduct him to the spot. Crowe was not now quite fo forward as he had appeared before to atchieve this adventure. He began to start objections with respect to the borrowed armour: he wanted to stipulate the comforts of a can of flip, and a candle's end, during his vigil; and hinted fomething of the damage he might fustain from your malicious imps of darkness.

The doctor told him, the constitutions of chivalry absolutely required that he should be left in the dark alone, and fasting, to spend the night in pious meditations; but if he had any fears which disturbed his conscience, he had much better desist, and give up all thoughts of knight-errantry, which could not confift with the least shadow of apprehension. The captain, stung by this remark, replied not a word; but gathering up the armour into a bundle, threw it on his back, and fet out for the place of probation, preceded by Clarke with the lanthorn. When they arrived at the church, Fillet, who had procured the key from the fexton, who was his patient, opened the door, and conducted ducted our novice into the middle of the chancel, where the armour was deposited. Then bidding Crowe draw his hanger, committed him to the protection of heaven, assuring him he would come back, and find him either dead or alive by day-break, and perform the remaining part of the ceremony. So saying, he and the other associates shook him by the hand and took their leave, after the surgeon had tilted up the lanthorn, in order to take a view of his visage, which was pale and haggard.

Before the door was locked upon him, he called aloud, "Hilloa! doctor, hip—another word, d'ye fee—" They forthwith returned, to know what he wanted, and found him already in a sweat. "Heark ye, brother (said he, wiping his face) I do suppose as how one may pass away the time in whistling the black joke, or singing black-ey'd Susan, or some such forrowful ditty." "By no means, (cried the doctor) such pastimes are neither suitable to the place, nor the occasion, which is altogether a religious exercise. If you have got any pfalms by heart, you may fing a stave or two, or repeat the doxology." "Would I had Tom Laverick here, (replied our novitiate) he would fing you anthems like a fea-mew-a had been a clerk a-shore—many's the time and often I've given him a rope's end for finging pfalms in the larboard watch-would I had hired the fon of a bitch to have taught me a cast of his office—but it cannot be holp, brother-if we can't go large, we must haul upon a wind, as the faying isif we can't fing, we must pray." The company again left him to his devotion, and returned to the public house, in order to execute the effential part of their project.

CHAP. VII.

In which the knight resumes his importance.

OCTOR Fillet having borrowed a couple of sheets from the landlady, dreffed the misanthrope and Tom Clarke in ghoftly apparel, which was re-inforced by a few drops of liquid phosphorus, from Ferret's phial, rubbed on the fore-heads of the two adventurers. Thus equipped they returned to the church with their conductor, who entered with them foftly at an aile which was opposite to a place where the novice kept watch. They stole unperceived through the body of the church; and though it was fo dark that they could not diftinguish the captain with the eye, they heard the found of his steps, as he walked backwards and forwards on the pavement with uncommon expedition, and an ejaculation now and then escape in a murmur from his lips. Dai Alon Louna

At mention of these names, Crowe's terrors began to give way to his resentment, and he pronounced in a quick tone of surprize, mixed with indignation,

tion, "What d'ye want? what d'ye want? what d'ye want, ho?" The spirit replied, "We are sent to warn thee of thy fate." "From whence, ho?" cried the captain, whose choler had by this time well nigh triumphed over his fear. "From heaven," faid the voice. "Ye lie, ye b-s of hell! (did our novice exclaim) ye are damned for heaving me out of my right, five fathom and a half by the lead, in burning brimstone. Don't I see the blue flames come out of your hawfeholes-mayhap you may be the devil himself for aught I know-but, I trust in the Lord, d'ye see-I never difrated a kinsman, d'ye see; so don't come along fide of me-put about on th'other tack, d'ye fee-you need not clap hard aweather, for you'll foon get to hell again with a flowing fail." So faying, he had recourse to his Pater-noster; but perceiving the apparitions approach, he thundered out, "Avast,-avast-sheer off, ye babes of hell, or I'll be foul of your forelights." He accordingly forung forwards wards with his hanger, and very probably would have fet the spirits on their way to the other world, had not he fallen over a pew in the dark, and intangled himself so much among the benches, that he could not immediately recover his footing. triumvirate took this opportunity to retire; and fuch was the precipitation of Ferret in his retreat, that he encountered a post, by which his right eye sustained considerable damage: a circumstance which induced him to inveigh bitterly against his own folly, as well as the impertinence of his companions, who had inveigled him into such a troublesome adventure. Neither he nor Clarke could be prevailed upon to revisit the novice. The doctor himself thought his disease was desperate; and, mounting his horse, returned to his own habitation.

Ferret, finding all the beds in the public house were occupied, composed himself to sleep in a windsor-chair at the chimney-corner; and Mr. Clarke, whose disposition was extremely amorous,

rous, resolved to renew his practices on the heart of Dolly. He had reconnoitred the apartments in which the bodies of the knight and his squire were depofited, and discovered close by the top of the stair-case a fort of a closet or hovel just large enough to contain a truckle-bed, which, from fome other particulars, he supposed to be the bedchamber of his beloved Dolly, who had by this time retired to her repose. Full of this idea, and infligated by the dæmon of defire, Mr. Thomas crept foftly up stairs; and lifting the latch of the closet-door, his heart began to palpitate with joyous expectation: but before he could breathe the gentle effusions of his love, the fupposed damsel started up, and seizing him by the collar with an Herculean gripe, uttered, in the voice of Crabthaw, "It wa'n't for nothing that I dreamed of Newgate, firrah; but I'd have thee to know, an arrant fquire is not to be robbed by fuch a peddling thief as thee-here I'll howld thee vait, and the devil were in thy VOL. I. H doublet

It was impossible for Mr. Clarke to disengage himself, and equally impracticable to speak in his own vindication; fo that here he stood trembling and half throttled, until the whole house being alarmed, the landlady and her oftler ran up stairs with a candle. When the light rendered objects visible, an equal astonishment prevailed on all fides: Crabshaw was confounded at fight of Mr. Clarke, whose person he well knew; and releasing him instantly from his grasp, "Bodikins! (cried he) I believe as how this hawfe is haunted—who thought to meet with Measter Laayer Clarke at midnight, and fo far from hoam." The landlady could not comprehend the meaning of this encounter; nor could Tom conceive how Crabshaw had transported himfelf hither from the room below, in which he faw him quietly reposed. Yet nothing was more easy than to explain this mystery: the apartment below below was the chamber which the hostess and her daughter reserved for their own convenience; and this particular having been intimated to the squire while he was at supper, he had refigned the bed quietly, and been conducted hither in the absence of the) company. Tom, recollecting himself as well as he could, professed himself of Crabshaw's opinion, that the house was haunted, declaring that he could not well account for his being there in the dark; and leaving those that were affembled to discuss this knotty point, retired down stairs, in hope of meeting with his charmer, whom accordingly he found in the kitchen just rifen, and wrapped in a loofe dishabille.

The noise of Crabshaw's cries had awakened and aroused his master, who, rising suddenly in the dark, snatched up his sword that lay by his bed-side, and hastened to the scene of tumult, where all their mouths were opened at once, to explain the cause of the disturbance, and make an apology for breaking his honour's reft. He faid nothing; but taking the candle in his hand, beckoned to his fquire to follow him into his apartment, refolving to arm and take horse immediately. Crabshaw understood his meaning; and while he shuffled on his cloaths, yawning hideously all the while, wished the lawyer at the devil for having vifited him fo unfeafonably; and even curfed himself for the noise he had made, in consequence of which he foresaw he should now be obliged to forfeit his night's rest, and travel in the dark, exposed to the inclemencies of the weather. " Pox rot thee, Tom Clarke, for a wicked laayer! (faid he to himfelf) hadst thou been hanged at Bartlemey-tide, I should this night have flept in peace, that I should-an I would there was a blifter on this plaguy tongue of mine for making fuch a hollowballoo; that I do-five gallons of cold water has my poor belly been drenched with fince night fell; fo as my reins and my b. WEV

my liver are all one as if they were turned into ice, and my whole harflet shakes and shivers like a vial of quick-silver. I have been dragged, half drowned like a rotten ewe, from the bottom of a river; and who knows but I may be next dragged quite dead from the bottom of a coal-pit—if so be as I am, I shall go to hell to be sure, for being confarned like in my own moorder; that I will: so I will: for a plague on it, I had no business with the vagaries of this crazy-peated measter of mine, a pox on him, say I."

He had just finished this soliloquy as he entered the apartment of his master, who desired to know what was become of his armour. Timothy, understanding that it had been left in the room when the knight undressed, began to scratch his head in great perplexity; and at last declared it as his opinion that it must have been carried off by witchcrast. Then he related his adventure with Tom Clarke, who he said was conveyed to his bedfide he knew not how; and concluded, with affirming they were no better than Papishes, who did not believe in witchcraft. Sir Launcelot could not help fmiling at his simplicity; but assuming a peremptory air, he commanded him to fetch the armour without delay, that he might afterwards faddle the horses, in order to prosecute their journey. Timothy retired in great tribulation to the kitchen, where finding the misanthrope, whom the noise had also disturbed, and still impressed with the notion of his being a conjurer, he offered him a shilling if he would cast a figure, and let him know what was become of his mafter's armour.

Ferret, in hope of producing more mischief, informed him without hesitation, that one of the company had conveyed it into the chancel of the church, where he would now find it deposited; at the same time prefenting him with the key, which Mr.

The four J

Mr. Fillet had left in his custody. The squire, who was none of those who set hobgoblins at defiance, being afraid to enter the church alone at these hours, bargained with the oftler to accompany and light him with a lanthorn. Thus attended, he advanced to the place, where the armour lay in a heap, and loaded it upon the back of his attendant without molestation, the launce being shouldered over the whole. In this equipage they were just going to retire, when the oftler hearing a noise at some distance, wheeled about with fuch velocity, that one end of the spear saluting Crabshaw's pate, the poor squire measured his length on the ground; and crushing the lanthorn in his fall, the light was extinguished. The other, terrified at these effects of his own sudden motion, threw down his burthen, and would have betaken himself to flight, had not Crabshaw laid fast hold on his leg, that he himself might not be deserted. The sound H 4 of the pieces clattering on the pavement, roused captain Crowe from a trance or flumber in which he had lain fince the apparition vanished; and he hollowed, or rather bellowed, with vast vociferation. Timo-thy and his friend were so intimidated by this terrific frain, that they thought no more of the armour, but ran home arm in arm, and appeared in the kitchen with all the marks of horror and consternation.

When Sir Launcelot came forth wrapped in his cloak, and demanded his arms, Crabshaw declared that the devil had them in possession; and this affertion was confirmed by the offler, who pretended to know the devil by his roar. Ferret sat in his corner, maintaining the most mortifying silence, and enjoying the impatience of the knight, who in vain requested an explanation of this mystery. At length his eyes began to lighten, when seizing Crabshaw in one hand, and the oftler in the other. Trois other, he fwore by heaven he would dash their souls out, and raze the house to the foundation, if they did not instantly disclose the particulars of this transaction. The good woman fell on her knees, protesting, in the name of the Lord, that she was innocent as the child unborn, thos she had lent the captain a Prayer Book to learn the Lord's Prayer, a lanthorn and candle to light him to the church, and a couple of clean sheets for the use of the other gentlemen. The knight was more and more puzzled by this declaration; when Mr. Clarke, coming into the kitchen, prefented himself with a low obeifance to his old patron.

Sir Launcelot's anger was immediately converted into surprize. He set at liberty the squire and the oftler; and stretching out his hand to the lawyer, "My good friend Clarke, (said he) how came you hither? Can you solve this knotty point which hath involved us all in fuch confusion?"

Tom forthwith began a very circumstantial recapitulation of what had happened to his uncle; in what manner he had been disappointed of the estate; how he had accidentally feen his honour, been enamoured of his character, and become ambitious of following his example. Then he related the particulars of the plan which had been laid down to divert him from his defign, and concluded with affuring the knight, that the captain was a very honest man, though he seemed to be a little disordered in his intellects. " I believe it, (replied Sir Launcelot): madness and honesty are not incompatible—indeed I feel it by experience."

Tom proceeded to ask pardon, in his uncle's name, for his having made so free with the knight's armour; and begged his honour, for the love of God, would use his authority with Crowe that he might quit all thoughts of knight-errantry, for which he was by no means qualified; fied; for being totally ignorant of the laws of the land, he would be continually committing trespasses, and bring himself into trouble. He said in case he should prove refractory, he might be apprehended by virtue of a friendly warrant, for having feloniously carried off the knight's accourrements. "Taking away another man's moveables, (said he) and personal goods against the will of the owner, is furtum and felony according to the statute: different indeed from robbery, which implies putting in fear on the king's highway, in alta via regia violenter, & felonice captum & asportatum in magnum terrorem, &c. for if the robbery be laid in the indictment as done in quadam via pedestri, in a foot-path, the offender will not be ousted of his clergy. It must be in alta via regia; and your honour will please to take notice, that robberies committed on the river Thames, are adjudged as done in alta via regia; for H 6

the king's highstream is all the same as the king's highway."

Sir Launcelot could not help smiling at Tom's learned investigation. He congratulated him on the progress he had made in the study of the law. He expressed his concern at the strange turn the captain had taken; and promised to use his influence in persuading him to desist from the preposterous design he had formed. The lawyer thus affured, repaired immediately to the church, accompanied by the squire, and held a parley with his uncle, who, when he understood that the knight in perfon defired a conference, surrendered up the arms quietly, and returned to the publick-house. Sir Launcelot received the honest seaman with his usual complacency; and perceiving great discomposure in his looks, faid, he was forry to hear he had passed such a disagreeable night to so little purpose. Crowe, having recruited his spirits with a bumper of brandy, thanked him for his concern cern, and observed that he had pasfed many a hard night in his time; but fuch another as this, he would not be bound to weather for the command of the whole British navy. " I have feen Davy Jones in the shape of a blue flame, d'ye fee, hopping to and fro, on the spritsail yard arm; and I've feen your Jacks o'the Lanthorn, and Wills o'the Wifp, and many fuch spirits, both by sea and land: but, to-night I've been boarded by all the devils and damn'd fouls in hell, fqueaking and fqualling, and glimmering and glaring. Bounce, went the door-crack, went the pew-crash, came the tacklewhite-sheeted ghosts dancing in one corner by the glow-worm's light black devils hobbling in another-Lord, have mercy upon us! and I was hailed, Tom, I was, by my grand-mother Jane, and my aunt Bridget, d'ye fee-a couple of damn'd -but they're roafting; that's one comfort, my lad." siriol sid beting brandy, chanked bins lot his con-

When he had thus disburthened his conscience, Sir Launcelot introduced the subject of the new occupation at which he aspired. "I understand, said he, that you are defirous of treading the paths of errantry, which I affure you, are thorny and troublesome. Nevertheless, as your purpose is to exercise your humanity and benevolence, fo your ambition is commendable. But towards the practice of chivalry, there is fomething more required than the virtues of courage and generofity. A knight-errant ought to understand the sciences, to be master of ethics or morality, to be well versed in theology, a complete casuist, and minutely acquainted with the laws of his country. He should not only be patient of cold, hunger, and fatigue, righteous, just, and valiant; but also chaste, religious, temperate, polite, and conversable; and have all his passions under the rein, except love, whose empire he should fubmiffively acknowledge. He faid, this this was the very effence of chivalry, and no man had ever made such a profession of arms, without having first placed his affection upon some beauteous object, for whose honour, and at whose command, he would chearfully encounter the most dreadful perils.

He took notice that nothing could be more irregular than the manner in which Crowe had attempted to keep his vigil: for he had never ferved his noviciate—he had not prepared himself with abstinence and prayer-he had not provided a qualified godfather for the ceremony of dubbing he had no armour of his own to wake; but, on the very threshold of chivalry, which is the perfection of justice, had unjustly purloined the arms of another knight: that this was a meer mockery of a religious institution; and therefore unpleating in the fight of heaven; witness, the demons and hobgoblins that were permitted to disturb and torment him in his trial.

Crowe

Crowe having listened to these remarks, with earnest attention, replied, after some hesitation : "I am bound to you, brother, for your kind and christian counsel-I doubt as how I've steered by a wrong chart, d'ye see-as for the matter of the fciences, to be fure, I know plain failing and mercator; and am an indifferent good feamen, thof I fay it that should not say it: but as to all the rest, no better than the viol block or the geer capstan. Religion I han't much over-hauled; and we tars laugh at your polite conversation, thof, mayhap, we can chaunt a few ballads to keep the hands awake in the night watch; then for chastity, brother, I doubt that's not to be expected in a failor just come a-shore, after a long voyage—fure all those poor hearts won't be damned for steering in the wake of nature. As for a sweet-heart, Bet Mizen of St. Catherine's would fit me to a hair-he and I are old messmates; and-what fignifies talking, ing, brother, she knows already the trim of my vessel, d'ye see." He concluded with saying, "He thought he wa'n't too old to learn; and if Sir Launcelot would take him in tow, as his tender, he would stand by him all weathers, and it should not cost his consort a farthing's expence."

The knight said, he did not think himself of consequence enough to have such a pupil; but should always be ready to give him his best advice, as a specimen of which he exhorted him to weigh all the circumstances, and deliberate calmly and leifurely, before he actually engaged in fuch a boisterous profession, afforing him that if, at the end of three months, his resolution should continue, he would take upon himfelf the office of his instructor. In the mean time, he gratified the hostess for his lodging, put on his armour, took leave of the company, and mounting Bronzomarte, proceeded foutherly, being attended by his fquire

Which is within a hair's breadth of proving highly interesting.

LEAVING captain Crowe and his nephew for the present, though they and even the mifanthrope will reappear in due feason, we are now obliged to attend the progress of the knight, who proceeded in a foutherly direction, infensible of the storm that blew, as well as of the darkness, which was horrible. For some time Crrbshaw ejaculated curses in filence; till at length his anger gave way to his fear, which waxed fo strong upon him, that he could no longer refist the defire of alleviating it, by entering into a conversation with his master. By way of introduction, he gave Gilbert the spur, directing him towards the flank of Bronzomarte, which shock, that the knight was almost dismounted. When Sir Launcelot, with some warmth, asked the reafon of this attack, the fquire replied in these words: "The devil, (God bless us) mun be playing his pranks with Gilbert too, as fure as I'm a living foul!--I'se wage a teaster, the foul fiend has left the feaman, and got into Gilbert, that he has --- when a has passed through an ass and a horse, I'se marvel what beast a will get into next." " Probably into a mule, (said the knight;) in that case you will be in some danger-but I can, at any time, disposses you with a horsewhip."-" Aye, aye, (answered Timothy) your honour has a mortal good hand at giving a flap with a fox's tail, as the faying is-'tis a wonderment you did not try your hand on that there wifeacre that stole your honour's harness, and wants to be an arrant with a murrain to 'un-Lord help his fool's head!

it becomes him as a fow doth a cartfaddle." " There is no guilt in infirmity (faid the knight;) I punish the vicious only." "I would your honour would punish Gilbert then, (cried the fquire) for 'tis the most vicious tuoad that ever I laid a leg over-but as to that same seafaring man, what may his distemper be?" " Madness;" (answered Sir Launcelot.) " Bodikins, (exclaimed the squire) I doubt as how other volks are leame of the same leg-but a'n't vor fuch fmall gentry as he to be mad: they mun leave that to their betters." "You feem to hint at me, Crabshaw: do you really think I am mad?" "I may fay as how I have looked your honour in the mouth; and a forry dog should I be, if I did not know your humours as well as I know e'er a beast in the steable at Greavesbury-hall." "Since you are fo well acquainted with my madness, (faid the knight) what opinion have you of yourself, who serve and follow

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 165 low a lunatic?" "I hope I han't ferved your honour for nothing, but I shall inherit some of your cast vagaries—when your honour is pleased to be mad, I should be very forry to be found right in my fenses. Timothy Crabshaw will never eat the bread of unthankfulnefs It shall never be said of him that he was wifer than his meafter: as for the matter of following a madman, we may fay your honour's face is made of a fiddle; every one that looks on you loves you." This compliment the knight returned by faying, " If my face is a fiddle, Crabshaw, your tongue is a fiddle-flick that plays upon it-yet your music is very disagreeable-you don't keep time." " Nor you neither, measter, (cried Timothy) or we shouldn't be here wandering about under cloud of night, like sheep-stealers, or evil spirits with troubled consciences."

Here the discourse was interrupted by a sudden disaster, in consequence of which the squire uttered an inarticulate roar that startled the knight himself, who was very little subject to the sensation of fear: but his furprize was changed into vexation when he perceived Gilbert without a rider passing by, and kicking his heels with great agility. He forthwith turned his steed, and, riding back a few paces, found Crabshaw rifing from the ground. When he asked what was become of his horse, he answered in a whimpering "Horse! would I could once tone. fee him fairly carrion for the hounds -for my part I believe as how 'tis no horse but a devil incarnate; and yet I've been worse mounted, that I have-I'd like to have rid a horse that was foaled of an acorn."

This accident happened in a hollow way, overshadowed with trees, one of which the storm had blown down, so that it lay over the road, and one of its boughs projecting horizontally, encountered the squire as he trotted along in the dark. Chancing to hitch hitch under his long chin, he could not difengage himself; but hung suspended like a slitch of bacon; while Gilbert, pushing forward, left him dangling, and, by his aukward gambols, feemed to be pleafed with the joke. This capricious animal was not retaken without the perfonal endeavours of the knight: for Crabshaw absolutely refusing to budge a foot from his honour's fide, he was obliged to alight, and fasten Bronzomarte to a tree: then they fet out together, and with some difficulty found Gilbert with his neck stretched over a five barred gate, fnuffing up the morning-air. The fquire, however, was not remounted, without having first undergone a severe reprehension from his master, who upbraided him with his cowardice, threatened to chastise him on the spot, and declared that he would divorce his dastardly foul from his body, should he ever be incommoded or affronted with another in-Rance stance of his base-born apprehension. Though there was some risque in carrying on the altercation at this juncture, Timothy having bound up his jaws, could not withstand the inclination he had to confute his mafter. He therefore, in a muttering accent, protested that if the knight would give him leave, he should prove that his honour had tied a knot with his tongue which he could not untie with all his teeth. " How, caitiff, (cried Sir Launcelot) prefume to contend with me in argument!" " Your mouth is scarce shut, (said the other) since you declared that a man was not to be punished for madness, because it was a distemper: now I will maintain that cowardice is a distemper as well as madness; for nobody would be afraid if he could help it." "There is more logic in that remark (refumed the knight) than I expected from your clod-pate, Crabshaw: but I must explain the difference between cowardice and madness. Cowardice, tho' fometimes fometimes the effect of natural imbecility, is generally a prejudice of education, or bad habit contracted from misinformation, or misapprehension, and may certainly be cured by experience, and the exercise of reason: but this remedy cannot be applied in madness, which is a privation or disorder of reason itself." " So is cowardice, as I'm a living foul, (exclaimed the fquire) don't you fay a man is frightened out of his fenses? for my peart, measter, I can neither fee nor hear, much less argufy when I'm in fuch a quandary: wherefore, I believe, odds bodikins! that cowardice and madness are both distempers, and differ no more than the hot and cold fits of an ague. When it teakes your honour, you're all heat and fire and fury, Lord bless us! but when it catches poor Tim, he's cold and dead-hearted, he sheakes and shivers like an aspen-leaf, that he does." "In that case, (anfwered the knight) I shall not punish you for the distemper which you can-VOL. I. not not help, but for engaging in a fervice exposed to perils, when you knew your own infirmity; in the fame manner as a man deserves punishment, who enlifts himfelf for a foldier, while he labours under any secret disease." " At that rate (faid the fquire) my bread is like to be rarely buttered o'both fides, I faith. But, I hope, as by the bleffing of God I have run mad, fo I shall in good time grow valiant, under your honour's precept and example."

By this time a very disagreeable night was succeeded by a fair, bright morning, and a market-town appeared at the distance of three or four miles, when Crabshaw, having no longer the fear of hobgoblins before his eyes, and being moreover cheared by the fight of a place where he hoped to meet with comfortable entertainment, began to talk big, to expatiate on the folly of being afraid, and finally set all danger at defiance; when all of a fudden he was presented with an opportunity of putting in practice

In an opening between two lanes, they perceived a gentleman's coach stopped by two highwaymen on horseback, one of whom advanced to reconnoitre and keep the coast clear, while the other exacted contribution from the travellers in the coach. He who acted as centinel, no sooner saw our adventurer appearing from the lane, than he rode up with a pistol in his hand, and ordered him to halt on pain of immediate death.

To this peremptory mandate the knight made no other reply than charging him with such impetuosity that he was unhorsed in a twinkling, and lay sprawling on the ground, seemingly fore bruised with his fall. Sir Launcelot commanding Timothy to alight and secure the prisoner, couched his launce, and rode full speed at the other highwayman, who was not a little disturbed at sight of such an apparition. Nevertheless, he fired his pistol without effect; and, clapping spurs to his horse, sled away at full gallop. (The knight purfued him with all the speed that Bronzomarte could exert; but the robber being mounted on a fwift hunter, kept him at a distance ; and, after a chace of feveral miles, escaped thro' a wood fo entangled with coppies, that Sir Launcelot thought proper to defift. He then, for the first time, recollected the fituation in which he had left the other thief, and remembering to have heard a female shriek, as he passed by the coach-window, refolved to return with all expedition, that he might make a proffer of his fervice to the lady, according to the obligation of knight-errantry. But he had lost his way; and after an hour's ride, during which he traversed many a field, and circled divers hedges, he found himself in the market-town aforementioned. Here the first object that presented itself to his eyes, was Crabshaw, on foot, surrounded by a mob, tearing his hair, stamping with his feet, and roaring out in manifest distraction, "Shew me the mayor, for

(for the love of God) shew me the mayor! - O Gilbert, Gilbert! a murrain take thee, Gilbert ! fure thou walt foaled for my destruction!"

From these exclamations, and the antic dress of the squire, the people, not without reason, concluded that the poor foul had loft his wits; and the beadle was just going to secure him, when the knight interpoled, and at once attracted the whole attention of the populace. Timothy, feeing his master, fell down on his knees, crying " The thief has run away with Gilbert-you may pound me into a peast, as the faying is: but now I'se as mad as your worship; an't afeard of the devil and all his works." Sir Launcelot defiring the beadle would forbear, was instantly obeyed by that officer, who had no inclination to put the authority of his place in competition with the power of fuch a figure armed at all points, mounted on a fiery fleed, and ready for the combat. He ordered Crabshaw to attend him to the next inn, where he alighted; then then taking him into a separate apartment, demanded an explanation of the unconnected words he had uttered. The fquire was in fuch agitation, that, with infinite difficulty, and by dint of a thousand different questions, his master learned the adventure to this effect: Crabshaw, according to Sir Launcelot's command, had alighted from his horse, and drawn his cutlass, in hope of intimidating the discomfited robber into a tame furrender, though he did not at all relish the nature of the service: but the thief was neither fo much hurt, nor fo tame as Timothy had imagined. He started on his feet with his pistol still in his hand; and presenting it to the squire, fwore with dreadful imprecations, that he would blow his brains out in an instant. Crabshaw, unwilling to hazard the trial of this experiment, turned his back, and fled with great precipitation; while the robber, whose horse had run away, mounted Gilbert, and rode off across the country. It was at this period, that two footmen belonging belonging to the coach, who had stayed behind to take their morning's whet, at the inn where they lodged, came up to the affiftance of the ladies, armed with blunderbusses; and the carriage proceeded, leaving Timothy alone in distraction and despair. He knew not which way to turn, and was afraid of remaining on the spot, lest the robbers should come back and revenge themselves upon him for the disappointment they had undergone. In this diffres, the first thought that occurred, was to make the best of his way to the town, and demand the affiftance of the civil magistrate towards the retrieval of what he had lost: a design which he executed in fuch a manner, as juftly entailed upon him the imputation of lunacy.

While Timothy stood fronting the window, and answering the interrogations of his master, he suddenly exclaimed, "Bodikins! there's Gilbert!" and sprung into the street with incredible agility. There finding his strayed companion brought back by one of the footmen who attended the coach, whe imprinted a kills on his forehead; and hanging about his neck, with the tears in his eyes, hailed his return with the following falutation: "Art thou come back, my darling? ah Gilbert, Gilbert! a pize upon thee! thou hadft like to have been a dear Gilbert to me! how couldst thou break the heart of thy old friend, who has known thee from a colt? feven years next grass have I fed thee and bred thee; provided thee with fweet hay, delicate corn, and fresh litter, that thou mought lie warm, dry, and confortable. Ha'n't I currycombed thy carcafe 'till it was as fleek as a floe, and cherished thee as the apple of mine eye? for all that thou hast played me an hundred dog's-tricks; biting, and kicking, and plunging, as if the devil was in thy body; and now thou couldst run away with a thief, and leave me to be flea'd alive by master: what canst thou fay for thyself, thou cruel, hardhearted

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 177 hearted, unchristian tuoad!" To this tender expostulation, which afforded much entertainment to the boys, Gilbert answered not one word; but feemed altogether insensible to the caresses of Timothy, who forthwith led him into the stable. On the whole, he feems to have been an unfocial animal: for it does not appear that he ever contracted any degree of intimacy, even with Bronzomarte, during the whole course of their acquaintance and fellowship. On the contrary, he has been more than once known to fignify his aversion by throwing out behind, and other eruptive marks of contempt for that elegant charger, who excelled him asmuch in personal merit, as his rider Timothy was outshone by his allaccomplished master. While the fquire accommodated Gilbert in the stable, the knight fent for the footman who had brought him back; and, having presented him with a liberal acknowledgment, defired to 1 5 a genin what manner the horse had been retrieved.

The stranger satisfied him in this particular, by giving him to understand, that the highwayman, perceiving himself pursued across the country, plied Gilbert fo feverely with whip and four, that the animal refented the usage, and being besides, perhaps, a little ftruck with remorfe for having left his old friend Crabshaw, suddenly halted, and stood Rock still, notwithstanding all the Rripes and tortures he underwent; or if he moved at all, it was in a retrograde direction. The thief, feeing all his endeavours ineffectual, and himself in danger of being overtaken, wifely quitted his acquisition, and fled into the bosom of a neighbouring wood.

Then the knight inquired about the fituation of the lady in the coach, and offered himself as her guard and conductor: but was told that she was already safely lodged in the house of a gena gentleman at some distance from the road. He likewise learned that she was a person disordered in her senses, under the care and tuition of a widow lady her relation; and that in a day or two they should pursue their journey northward to the place of her habitation. After the footman had been some time dismissed, the knight recollected that he had forgot to afk the name of the person to whom he belonged; and began to be uneasy at this omiffion, which indeed was more interesting than he could imagine: for an explanation of this nature would in all likelihood, have led to a discovery, that the lady in the coach was no other than Miss Aurelia Darnel, who feeing him unexpectedly in fuch an equipage and attitude, as he passed the coach, (for his helmet was off) had screamed with surprize and terror, and fainted away. Nevertheless, when the recovered from her fwoon. the concealed the real cause of her agitation, and none of her attendants 1 6 were were acquainted with the person of Sir Launcelot.

The circumstances of the disorder, under which she was said to labour, shall be revealed in due course. In the mean time, our adventurer, though unaccountably affected, never dreamed of such an occurrence; but being very much fatigued, resolved to indemnify himself for the loss of last night's repose; and this happened to be one of the sew things in which Crabshaw selt an ambition to follow his master's example.

CHAP. IX.

Which may serve to shew, that true patriotism is of no party.

THE knight had not enjoyed his repose above two hours, when he was disturbed by such a variety of noises, as might have discomposed a brain of the firmest texture. The rumbling of carriages, and the rattling of horses feet on the pavement, was interintermingled with loud shouts, and the noise of fiddle, french-horn, and bagpipe. A loud peal was heard ringing in the church-tower, at some distance, while the inn resounded with clamour, confusion, and uproar.

Sir Launcelot being thus alarmed, started from his bed, and running to the window, beheld a cavalcade of persons well mounted, and distinguished by blue cockades. They were generally attired like jockies, with gold-laced hats and buckskinbreeches, and one of them bore a standard of blue filk, inscribed in white letters, LIBERTY AND THE LANDED INTEREST. He who rode at their head was a jolly figure, of a florid complexion and round belly; feemingly turned of fifty, and, in all appearance, of a choleric disposition. As they approached the market-place they waved their hats, huzza'd, and cried aloud, No FOREIGN CONNEC-TIONS, -OLD-ENGLAND FOR EVER. This acclamation, however, was not fo loud or universal, but that our adventurerventurer could distinctly hear a counter-cry from the populace, of No SLAVERY, -No Popish PRETENDER. An infinuation fo ill relished by the cavaliers, that they began to ply their horsewhips among the multitude, and were, in their turn, faluted with a discharge or volley of stones, dirt, and dead cats; in consequence of which some teeth were demolished, and many furtouts defiled.

Our adventurer's attention was foon called off from this scene, to contemplate another procession of people on foot, adorned with bunches of orange ribbons, attended by a regular band of mufick, playing God fave great George our king, and headed by a thin, swarthy personage, of a fallow aspect and large goggling eyes, arched over with two thick femicircles of hair, or rather briftles, jet black, and frowzy. His apparel was very gorgeous, though his address was aukward; he was accompanied by the mayor, recorder, and heads of the corporation, in their formalities. His enfigns were known by the inscription, Liberty of Conscience and the Protestant Succession; and the people saluted him as he passed with repeated cheers, that seemed to prognosticate success. He had particularly ingratiated himself with the good women, who lined the street, and sent forth many ejaculatory petitions in his favour.

Sir Launcelot immediately comprehended the meaning of this folemnity: he perceived it was the prelude to the election of a member to reprefent the county in parliament, and he was feized with an eager defire to know the names and characters of the competitors. In order to gratify this defire, he made repeated application to the bell-rope that depended from the cieling of his apartment; but this produced nothing, except the repetition of the words "Coming, Sir," which ecchoed from three or four different corners of the house. The waiters were so distracted by a variety of calls, that they stood motionless, in the state of the schoolman's ass between of determining where they should first offer their attendance.

Our knight's patience was almost exhausted, when Crabshaw entered the room, in a very strange equipage: one half of his face appeared close shaved, and the other covered with lather, while the blood trickled in two rivulets from his nofe, upon a barber's cloth that was tucked under his chin; he looked grim with indignation, and under his left arm carried his cutlass, unsheathed. he had acquired so much of the profession of knight-errantry we shall not pretend to determine; but, certain it is, he fell on his knees before Sir Launcelot, crying, with an accent of rage and distraction, " In the name of St. George for England, I beg a boon, Sir knight, and thy compliance I demand, before the peacock and the ladies."

Sir Launcelot, aftonished at this address, replied in a losty strain, "Valiant squire, thy boon is granted, provided vided it doth not contravene the laws of the land, and the constitutions of chivalry." "Then I crave leave (anfwered Crabshaw) to challenge and defy to mortal combat, that caitif barber who hath left me in this piteous condition; and I vow by the peacock, that I will not shave my beard, until I have shaved his head from his shoulders: fo may I thrive in the occupation of an arrant squire."

Before his master had time to enquire into particulars, they were joined by a decent man in boots, who was likewise a traveller, and had seen the rife and progress of Timothy's disaster. He gave the knight to unsterstand, that Crabshaw had sent for a barber, and already undergone one half of the operation, when the operator received the long expected melfage from both the gentlemen, who stood candidates at the election. The double fummons was no fooner intimated to him, than he threw down his bason and retired with precipitation, leaving the squire in the suds. Timothy

Timothy, incensed at this desertion, followed him with equal celerity into the street, where he collared the shaver, and insisted upon being entirely trimmed, on pain of the bastinado. The other sinding himself thus arrested, and having no time to spare for altercation, listed up his sist, and discharged it upon the snout of Crabshaw with such sorce, that the unfortunate aggressor was sain to bite the ground, while the victor hastened away, in hope of touching the double wages of corruption.

The knight being informed of these circumstances, told Timothy with a smile, that he should have liberty to defy the barber, but in the mean time, he ordered him to saddle Bronzomarte, and prepare for immediate service. While the squire was thus employed, his master engaged in conversation with the stranger, who happened to be a London dealer travelling for orders, and was well acquainted with the particulars which our adventurer wanted to know. It was from this communicative tradefman he learned, that the competitors were Sir Valentine Quickset and Mr. Isaac Vanderpelft; the first a mere fox-hunter, who depended for fuccefs in this election upon his interest among the high-flying gentry; the other a stock-jobber and contractor, of foreign extract, not without a mixture of Hebrew blood, immensely rich, who was countenanced by his grace of _____, and fupposed to have distributed large sums in securing a majority of votes among the yeomanry of the county, possessed of small freeholds, and copyholders, a great number of which last resided in this burrough. He faid these were generally diffenters and weavers; and that the mayor, who was himself a manufacturer, had received a very confiderable order for exportation, in confequence of which, it was believed, he would support Mr. Vanderpelft with all his influence and credit.

Sir Launcelot, rouzed at this intelligence, called for his armour, which which being buckled on in a hurry, he mounted his fleed, attended by Crabshaw on Gilbert, and rode immediately into the midft of the multitude by which the hustings were furrounded, just as Sir Valentine Quicket began to harangue the people from an occasional theatre, formed of a plank supported by the upperboard of the publick stocks, and an inferior rib of a wooden cage pitched also for the accommodation of petty delinquents.

Though the fingular appearance of Sir Launcelot at first attracted the eyes of all the spectators, yet they did not fail to yield attention to the speech of his brother knight, Sir Valentine, which ran in the following strain: "Gentlemen vreehoulders of this here county, I shan't pretend to meake a vine vlourishing speech,-I'm a plain spoken man, as you all know. I hope I shall always speak my maind without year or vavour, as the zaying is. 'Tis the way of the Quickfetswe are no upftarts, nor vorreigners, nor have we any Jewish blood in our veins; -we have lived in this here neighbourhood time out of maind, as you all know; and possess an estate of vive thousand clear, which we fpend at whoam, among you, in old English hospitality-All my vorevathers have been parliament-men, and I can prove that ne'er a one o'um gave a zingle vote for the court fince the revolution. Vor my own peart, I value not the ministry three skips of a louse, as the zaying is, I ne'er knew but one minister that was an honest man; and vor all the rest I care not if they were hanged as high as Haman, with a pox to'un-I am, thank God, a vree-born, true-hearted Englishman, and a loyal, thos unworthy, fon of the church-vor all they have done vor H-r, I'd vain know what they have done vor the church, with a vengeance-vor my own peart, I hate all vorreigners, and vorreign measures, whereby this poor nation is broken-backed with a difmal load of debt, and taxes rife fo high that that the poor cannot get bread. Gentlemen vreehoulders of this county, I value no minister a vig's end, d'ye fee; if you will vavour me with your votes and interest, whereby I may be returned, I'll engage one half of my estate that I never cry yea to vour shillings in the pound; but will cross the ministry in every thing, as in duty bound, and as becomes an honest vreeholder in the ould interest-but, if you fell your votes and your country for hire, you will be detefted in this here world, and damned in the next to all eternity: fo I leave every man to his own conscience."

This eloquent oration was received by his own friends with loud peals of applause; which, however, did not difcourage his competitor, who, confident of his own strength, ascended the rostrum, or, in other words, an old cask, set upright for the purpose. Having bowed all round to the audience, with a smile of gentle condescension, he told them, how ambitious he was of the honour to represent this county in parliament; and how happy he found himself in the encouragement of his friends, who had so unanimously agreed to support his pretentions. He faid, over and above the qualification he possessed among them, he had fourfcore thoufand pounds in his pocket, which he had acquired by commerce, the fupport of the nation, under the present happy establishment, in defence of which he was ready to spend the last farthing. He owned himself a faithful subject to his majesty king George, fincerely attached to the protestant fuccession, in detestation and defiance of a popish, an abjured, and outlawed pretender; and declared that he would exhauft his substance and his blood, if necessary, in maintaining the principles of the glorious revolution. "This (cried he) is the folid basis and foundation upon which I fland."

These last words had scarce proceeded from his mouth, when the head of the barrel or puncheon on which which he stood, being frail and infirm, gave way; so that down he went with a crash, and in a twinkling disappeared from the eyes of the astonished beholders. The fox-hunters perceiving his disaster, exclaimed, in the phrase and accent of the chace,
"Stole away! stole away!" and, with hideous vociferation, joined in the sylvan chorus which the hunters hollow when the hounds are at fault.

The difaster of Mr. Vanderpelft was foon repaired by the affiduity of his friends, who disengaged him from the barrel in a trice, hoisted him on the shoulders of four strong weavers, and refenting the unmannerly exultation of their antagonists, began to form themselves in order of battle. An obstinate fray would have undoubtedly enfued, had not their mutual indignation given way to their curiofity, at the motion of our knight, who had advanced into the middle between the two fronts, and waving his hand, as a fignal for them to give attention, addressed himself to them with

with graceful demeanor, in these words: " Countrymen, friends, and fellow-citizens, you are this day affembled to determine a point of the utmost consequence to yourselves and your posterity; a point that ought to be determined by far other weapons than brutal force and factious clamour. You, the freemen of England, are the basis of that excellent constitution, which hath long flourished the object of envy and admiration. To you belongs the inestimable privilege of choosing a delegate properly qualified to represent you in the high court of parliament. This is your birth-right, inherited from your ancestors, obtained by their courage, and fealed with their blood. It is not only your birthright, which you should maintain in defiance of all danger, but also a sacred truft, to be executed with the most scrupulous care and fidelity. The person whom you trust ought not only to be endued with the most inflexible integrity, but should likewife possess a fund of knowledge that VOL. I. K may may enable him to action a part of the legislature. an He must be well agquainted with the history the constitution, and the laws of his country: he must understand the forms of bufiness, the extent of the royal prerogative, the privilege of parliament, the detail of government, the nature and regulation of the finances, the different branches of commerce, the politicks that prevail, and the connections that subtist among the different powers of Europe: for, on all these subjects, the deliberations of a house of commons occasionally turn: but these great purposes will never be answered by electing an illiterate savage, scarce qualified, in point of understanding, to act as a country justice of the peace, a man who has fcarce ever travelled beyond the excursion of a fox-chace, whose conversation never rambles farther than his stable, his kennel, and his barn-yard; who rejects decorum as degeneracy, mistakes rufficity for independence, ascertains his courage by leaping over gates and ditches, ditches, and founds his triumphon feats of drinking; who holds his estate by a factious tenure, professes himself the blind flave of a party, without knowing the principles that gave it birth, or the motives by which it is actuated, and thinks that all patriotism confists in railing indifcriminately at ministers, and obstinately opposing every meafure of the administration. Such a man, with no evil intentions of his own, might be used as a dangerous tool in the hands of desperate faction, by scattering the seeds of disaffection, embarraffing the wheels of government, and reducing the whole kingdom to:anarchy." still ble vd boy ring

Here the knight was interrupted by the shouts and acclamations of the Vanderpelfites, who cried aloud, "Hear him! hear him! long life to the iron-cased orator." This clamour subsiding, he prosecuted his harangue to the following effect:

may be dangerous from ignorance, but is neither fo mischievous nor so K 2 detest-

In this place our adventurer's speech was drowned in the acciamations of of the fox-hunters, who now triumphed in their turn, and hoicksed the speaker, exclaiming, "Well opened fowler to un, to un again, Sweetlips! hee, Merry, Whitesoot!"

After a short interruption, he thus refumed his discourse: sid every

When such a caitif profests himfelf to you, like the devil, with a remptation in his hand, avoid him as if he were in fact the devil-it is not the offering of difinterested love; for what should induce him, who has no affections, to love you, to whose perfons he is an utter stranger? alas! it is not a benevolence, but a bribe. He wants to buy you at one market, that he may fell you at another. Without doubt his intention is to make an advantage of his purchase; and this aim he cannot accomplish, but by sacrificing, in some fort, your interest, your independency, to the wicked detigns of a minister, as he can expect no gratification for the faithful difcharge of his duty. But, even if he should not find an opportunity of felling you to advantage, the crime, the shame, the infamy, will still be the fame in you, who, bafer than the most abandoned prostitutes, have sold yourselves and your posterity for hire for K 3

-for a paultry price, to be refunded with interest by some minister, who will indemnify hinsfelf out lowyour own pockets: for, after all, you are bought and fold with your own money—the miserable pittance you may now receive, is no more than a pitcher full of water thrown in to moisten the fucker of that pump which will drain you to the bottom. Let me therefore advise and exhort you, my countrymen, to avoid the opposite extremes of the ignorant clown and the defigning courtier, and choose a man of honesty, intelligence, and moderation, who will winder the word and is don't we

The doctrine of moderation was a very unpopular subject in such an assembly; and, accordingly, they rejected it as one man. They began to think the stranger wanted to set up for himself, a supposition that could not fail to incense both sides equally, as they were both zealously engaged in their respective causes. The Whigs and the Tories joined against this intruder, who being neither, was treated like creants! (he cried) I spoke to you as men and christians, as free-born Britons and fellow-citizens: but I perceive you are a pack of venal, infamous scoundrels, and I will treat you accordingly." So saying, he brandished his lance, and riding into the thickest of the concourse, laid about him with such dexterity and effect, that the multitude was immediately dispersed, and he retired without surther molestation.

The same good fortune did not attend squire Crabshaw in his retreat.

The sudicrous singularity of his features, and the half-mown crop of hair that bristled from one side of his countenance, invited some wags to make merry at his expence: one of them K 4 clapped clapped a furze-bush under the tail of Gilbert, who, feeling himself thus stimulated a posteriori, kicked and plunged and capered in such a manner, that Timothy could hardly keep the saddle. In this commotion he lost his cap and his periwig, while the rabble pelted him in such a manner, that, before he could join his manser, he looked like a pillar, or rather a pillory, of mud.

CHAP. X.

Which sheweth that he who plays at bowls, will sometimes meet with rubbers.

SIR Launcelot, boiling with indignation at the venality and faction of the electors, whom he had harangued to so little purpose, retired with the most deliberate distain towards one of the gates of the town, on the outside of which his curiosity was attracted by a concourse of people, in the midst of whom stood Mr. Ferret, mounted upon a stool, with a kind kind of fatchel hanging round his neck, and a vial displayed in his right hand, while he held forth to the audience in a very vehement strain of elocution.

Crabshaw thought himself happily delivered, when he reached the fuburbs, and proceeded without halting; but his master mingled with the crowd, and heard the orator express himself to this effect: "Very likely, you may undervalue me and my medicine, because I don't appear upon a stage of rotten boards, in a shabby velvet coat and tye-periwig, with a foolish fellow in motley, to make you laugh by making wry faces: but I fcorn to use these dirty arts for engaging your attention. These paultry tricks, ad captandum vulgus, can have no effect but on ideots, and if you are ideots, I don't delire you should be my customers. Take notice, I don't address you in the file of a mountebank, or a high German doctor; and yet the kingdom is full of mountebanks, empiries, and quacks. K 5

We have quacks in religion, quacks in physic, quacks in law, quacks in politics, quacks in patriotism, quacks in government; high German quacks that have bliftered, sweated, bled, and purged the nation into an atrophy. But this is not all: they have not only evacuated her into a consumption, but they have intoxicated her brain, until she is become delirious: she can no longer pursue her own interest; or, indeed, rightly distinguish it : like the people of Nineveh, the can hardly tell her right hand from her left; but, as a changeling, is dazzled and delighted by an ignis fatuus, a Will o' the Wisp, an exhalation from the vilest materials in nature, that leads her aftray through Westphalian bogs and deferts, and will one day break her neck over some barren rocks, or leave her flicking in some H-n pit or quagmire. For my part, if you have a mind to betray your country, I have no objection. In felling yourselves and your fellow-citizens, you only dispose of a pack of rascals who deferve ferve to be fold-If you fell one another, why should not I sell this here Elixir of Long Life, which if properly used, will protract your days till you shall have feen your country ruined? I shall not pretend to disturb your understandings, which are none of the strongest, with a hotch-potch of unintelligible terms, fuch as Aristotle's four principles of generation, unformed matter, privation, efficient and final causes. Aristotle was a pedantic blockhead, and still more knave than fool. The same censure we may safely put on that wife-acre Dioscorides, with his faculties of fimples, his feminal, specific, and principal virtues; and that crazy commentator Galen, with his four elements, elementary qualities, his eight complexions, his harmonies, and discords. Nor shall I expatiate on the alkahest of that mad fcoundrel Paracelfus, with which he pretended to reduce flints into falt; nor the archaus or spiritus rector of that visionary Van Helmont, his simple, K 6 elementary water, his gas, ferments, and transmutations; nor shall I enlarge upon the falt, fulphur, and oil, the acidum vagum, the mercury of metals, and the volatilized vitriol of other modern chymists, a pack of ignorant, conceited, knavish rascals, that puzzle your weak heads with fuch jargon, just as a Germanized mer throws dust in your eyes, by lugging in and ringing the changes on the balance of power, the protestant religion, and your allies on the continent; acting like the juggler, who picks your pockets while he dazzles your eyes and amuses your fancy with twirling his fingers, and reciting the gibberish of bocus pocus; for, in fact, the balance of power is a mere chimera; as for the protestant rellgion, nobody gives himself any trouble about it; and allies on the continent we have none; or at least, none that would raife an hundred men to fave us from perdition, unless we paid an extravagant price for their affistance. But, to return to this here Elixir

Elixir of Long Life, I might embellish it with a great many high-founding epithers; but I difdain to follow the example of every illiterate vagabond, that from idleness turns quack, and advertises his nostrum in the public papers. I am neither a felonious dry-falter returned from exile, an hospital stump-turner, a decayed staymaker, a bankrupt-printer, or infolvent debtor, released by act of parliament. I did not pretend to adminifter medicines, without the least tineture of letters, or suborn wretches to perjure themselves in false affidavits of cures that were never performed; nor employ a set of led-captains to harangue in my praise, at all public places. I was bred regularly to the profession of chymistry, and have tried all the processes of alchemy, and I may venture to fay, that this here Elixir is, in fact, the chruseon pepuromenon ek puros, the visible, glorious, spiritual body, from whence all other beings derive their existence, as proceeding from their father the fun, and their mother mother the moon; from the fun, as from a living and spiritual gold, which is mere fire; consequently, the common and universal first created mover. from whence all moveable things have their distinct and particular motions; and also from the moon, as from the wife of the fun, and the common mother of all fublunary things: and for as much as man is, and must be the comprehensive end of all creatures, and the microcosm, he is counfelled in the Revelations to buy gold that is thoroughly fired, or rather pure fire, that he may become rich and like the fun; as, on the contrary, he becomes poor, when he abuses the arfenical poison; so that his filver, by the fire, must be calcined to a caput mortuum, which happens, when he will hold and retain the menstruum out of which he partly exists, for his own property, and doth not daily offer up the same in the fire of the sun, that the woman may be cloathed with the fun, and become a fun, and thereby rule over the moon; that is to fay, that

that he may get the moon under his feet.—Now this here Elixir, fold for no more than fix-pence a vial, contains the effence of the alkahest, the archæus, the catholicon, the menstruum, the sun, moon, and to sum up all in one word, is the true, genuine, unadulterated, unchangeable, immaculate and specific chruseon pepu-romenon ek puros."

The audience were variously affected by this learned oration: some of those who favoured the pretentions of the whig candidate, were of opinion that he ought to be punished for his presumption in reflecting so scurriloufly on ministers and measures. Of this fentiment was our adventurer. though he could not help admiring the courage of the orator, and owning within himfelf, that he had mixed fome melancholy truths with his fcurrility. Mr. Ferret would not have stood so long in his rostrum unmolested, had not he cunningly chosen his station immediately without the jurisdiction of the town, whose magistrates giftrates therefore could not take cognizance of his conduct ; but application was made to the constable of the other parish, while our nostrummonger proceeded in his speech, the conclusion of which produced such an effect upon his bearers, that his whole cargo was immediately exhansted. He had just stepped down from his stool, when the constable, with his staff, arrived, and took him under his guidance. Mr. Ferret, on this occasion, attempted to interest the people in his behalf, by exhorting them to vindicate the liberty of the subject, against fuch an act of oppression; but finding them deaf to the tropes and figures of his elocution, he addressed himself to our knight, reminding him of his duty to protect the helpless and the injured, and earnestly foliciting his interpolition. is workled at bein or bel

Sir Launcelot, without making the least reply to his entreaties, resolved to see the end of this adventure; and being joined by his squire, followed the prisoner at a distance, measuring back

the ground he had travelled the day before, until he reached another small borough, where Ferret was housed in the common prison. While he fat ahorfeback, deliberating on the next step he should take, he was accosted by the voice of Tom Clarke, who called in a whimpering tone, through a window grated with iron, "For the love of God! Sir Launcelot, do, dear Sir, be so good as to take the trouble to alight and come up stairs -I have fomething to communicate of consequence to the community in general, and you in particular-Pray, do, dear Sir Knight. I beg a boon in the name of St. Michael and St. George for England."

Our adventurer, not a little furprized at this address, dismounted without hesitation, and being admitted to the common jail, there found not only his old friend Tom, but also the uncle, sitting on a bench with a woollen night cap on his head, and a pair of spectacles on his nose, reading very earnestly in a book, which he after-afterwards understood was intituled, "The Life and Adventures of Valentine and Orfon." The captain no fooner faw his great pattern enter, than he rose and received him with the salutation of "What cheer, brother?" and before the knight could answer, added these words: "You fee how the land lies-here have Tom and I been fast a-shore these four and twenty hours; and this berth we have got by attempting to tow your galley, brother, from the enemy's harbour. Adds bobs! if we had this here fellow whorefon for a confort, with all our tackle in order, brother, we'd foon shew 'em the topsail, slip our cable, and down with their barricadoes. But, howsomever, it don't signify talking, -patience is a good fream-anchor, and will hold, as the faying is, -but, damn my-as for the matter of my boltsprit. Hearkye, hearkye, brother, damn'd hard to engage with three at a time, one upon my bow, one upon my quarter, and one right a-head, rubbing, and drubbing, lying 2010 lying athwart hawse, raking fore and ast, battering and grappling, and lashing—adds heart, brother; crash went the boltsprit—down came the round-top—up with the dead lights—I saw nothing but the stars at noon, lost the helm of my seven senses, and down I broached upon my broadside."—

As Mr. Clarke rightly conceived that his uncle would need an interpreter, he began to explain these hints by giving a circumstantial detail of his own and the captain's disaster. He told Sir Launcelot, that notwithstanding all his persuasion and remonstrances, captain Crowe infifted upon appearing in the character of a knighterrant; and with that view had fet out from the public-house on the morning that succeeded his vigil in the church: that upon the high-way they had met with a coach, containing two ladies, one of whom feemed to be under great agitation; for, as they passed, she struggled with the other, thrust out her head at the window, and faid fomething which a jullice

he could not diffinelly hear; that cantain Crowe was ftruck with admiration of her unequalled beauty; and he, (Tom) no fooner informed him who the was, than he resolved to set her at liberty, on the supposition that she was under restraint and in distress: that he accordingly unsheathed his cutlass, and riding back after the coach, commanded the driver to bring to, on pain of death: that one of the servants believing the captain to be an highwayman, presented a b'underbuss, and in all probability would have shot him on the fpot, had not he (the nephew) rode up and affured them the gentleman was non compos: that notwithstanding his intimation, all the three attacked him with the butt ends of their horse-whips, while the coach drove on, and although he laid about him with great fury, at last brought him to the ground by a stroke on the temple: that Mr. Clarke himself then interposed in desence of his kinsman, and was also severely beaten: that two of the fervants, upon application to a justice

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 213 a justice of the peace, residing near the field of battle, had granted a warrant against the captain and his nephew, and without examination, committed them as idle vagrants, after having seized their horses and their money, on pretence of their being suspected for highwaymen. "But, as there was no just cause of suspicion, (added be) I am of opinion, the juflice is guilty of a trespass, and may be fued for falfum imprisonamentum, and confiderable damages obtained; for you will please to observe, Sir, no justice has a right to commit any person 'till after due examination; befides, we were not committed for an affault and battery, audita querela, nor as wandering lunatics by the statute, who, to be fure, may be apprehended by a justice's warrant, and locked up and chained, if necessary, or to be fent to their last legal settlement: but we were committed as vagrants and fuspected highwaymen. "Ha! how! what! whose name? say, speak—heaven and earth!" (cried the Knight, with marks of the most violent emotion.) Clarke terrified at his looks, replied, "I beg your pardon a thousand times; I did not say positively

Words, which may be taken or interpreted by a law in general, or common fense, ought not to receive a ftrained, or unufual conftruction; and ambiguous words" "Speak, or be dumb for ever! (exclaimed Sir Launcelot in a terrific tone, laying, his hand on his fword) what young lady, ha! What name did she call upon?" Clarke falling on his knees, answered, not without stammering, " Miss Aurelia Darnel; to the best of my recollection, she called upon Sir Launcelot Greaves." " Sacred powers! (cried our adventurer) which way did the carriage proceed?" roonoil move of

When Tom told him that the coach quitted the post-road, and struck away to the right at full speed, Sir Launcelot was seized with a pensive sit; his head sunk upon his breast, and he mused in silence for several minutes, with the most melancholy expression on his countenance: then recollecting himself, he assumed a more composed and chearful air, and asked several questions with respect to the arms on the coach, and the liveries worn by the fervants. It was in the course of this interrogation, that he difcovered he had actually converfed with one of the foot-men. who had brought back Crabshaw's horse: a circumstance that filled him with anxiety and chagrin, as he had omitted to inquire the name of his mafter, and the place to which the coach was travelling; though, in all probability, had he made these inquiries, he would have received very little fatisfaction, there being reason to think the servants were enjoined fecrecy. The knight, in order to meditate on this unexpected adventure, fat down by his old friend, and entered into a reverie, which lasted about a quarter of an hour, and might have continued longer, had it not been interrupted by the voice of Crabshaw, who bawled aloud, "Look to it, my masters—as you brew you must

must drink—this shall be a dear day's work to some of you, for my part I say nothing—the braying as eats a little grass—one barber shaves not so close, but another finds a few stubble—you wanted to catch a capon, and you've stole a cat. He that takes up his lodgings in a stable, must be contented to lie upon litter .- "

The knight, defirous of knowing the cause that prompted Timothy to apothegmatize in this manner, looked through the grate, and perceived the squire fairly set in the stocks, surrounded by a mob of people. When he called to him, and asked the reafon of this difgraceful restraint, Crabshaw replied, "There's no cake, but there's another of the fame makewho never climbed never fell-after clouds comes clear weather. 'Tis all long of your honour I've met with this preferment; no defervings of my own, but the interest of my master. Sir knight, if you will flay the justice, hang the constable, release your squire, and burn the town, your name will VOL. I. be be famous in Rory Plbut, if you are content, I am thankful. Two hours are foon fpent in fuch good company; in the mean time look to'un jailor, there's a frog in the flocks."

Sir Launcelot, incenfed at this affront offered to his fervant, advanced to the prison-door, but found it fast locked, and when he called to the turnkey, he was given to understand that he himself was prisoner. Enraged at this intimation, he demanded at whose suit; and was answered through the wicket, " At the fuit of the king, in whose name I will hold you fast, with God's affistance."

The knight's looks now began to lighten, he rolled his eyes around, and fnatching up an oaken bench, which three ordinary men could scarce have lifted from the ground, he, in all likelihood, would have shattered the door in pieces, had not he been restrained by the interposition of Mr. Clarke, who intreated him to have a little patience, affuring him he would suggest a plan that would avenge him amply amply on the justice, without any breach of the peace. "I say, the justige (added Tom) because it must be his doing .- He is a little petulant fort of a fellow, ignorant of the law, guilty of numberless irregularities; and, if properly managed, may for this here act of arbitrary power, be not only cast in a swinging sum, but even turned out of the commission with difgrace.

This was a very feafonable hint, in consequence of which the bench was foftly replaced, and captain Crowe deposited the poker, with which he had armed himself to second the efforts of Sir Launcelot. They now, for the first time, perceived that Ferret had disappeared; and, upon inquiry, found that he was in fact the occasion of the knight's detention and harbouring more dangerous defigns under an prectiff AoH of lunacy.

Description of a modern Magistrate.

Defore the knight would take any resolution for extricating himself from his present embarrassment, he defired to be better acquainted with the character and circumstances of the juffice by whom he had been confined, and likewise to understand the meaning of his own detention. To be informed in this last particular, he renewed his dialogue with the turnkey, who told him, through the grate, that Ferret no sooner perceived him in the jail, without his offensive arms, which he had left below, than he defired to be carried before the justice, where he had given information against the knight, as a violator of the public peace, who strolled about the country with unlawful arms, rendering the highways unfafe, encroaching upon the freedom of elections, putting his majesty's liege subjects in fear of their lives, and, in all probability, harbase harbouring more dangerous designs under an affected cloak of lunacy. Ferret, upon this information, had been released, and entertained as an evidence for the king mand Crab-shaw was put in the stocks, as an idle stroller.

Sir Launcelot, being fatisfied in these particulars, addressed himself to his fellow-prisoners, and begged they would communicate what they knew respecting the worthy magistrate, whohad been fo premature in the execution of his office. This request was no fooner fignified than a crewdof naked wretches crowded around him; and, like a congregation of rooks, opened their throats all at once, in accusation of justice Gobble. The knight was moved at this scene, which he could not help comparing, in his own mind, to what would appear upon a much more awful occasion, when the cries of the widow and the orphan, the injured and oppressed, would be uttered at the tribunal of any unerring Judge against the villainous andi L 3.

and insolent authors of their calami-

When he had, with some difficulty, quieted their clamours, and confined his interrogation to one person of a tolerably decent appearance, he learned that justice Gobble, whose father was a taylor, had for fome time served as a journeyman hosier in London, where he had picked up fome law-terms, by converfing with hackney-writers and attorneys clerks of the lowest order; that, upon the death of his master, he had infinuated himself into the good graces of the widow, who took him for her husband, so that he became a person of some confideration, and faved money apace; that his pride, increasing with his substance, was reinforced by the vanity of his wife, who persuaded him to retire from business, that they might live genteelly in the country; that his father dying, and leaving a couple of houses in this town, Mr. Gobble had come down with his lady to take possession, and liked the place

place to well as to make a more confiderable purchase in the neighbour hood; that a certain peer being indebted to him in the large way of his bufiness, and either unwilling or unable to pay the money, had compounded the debt, by inferting his name in the commission; since which period his own infolence, and his wife's oftentation, had exceeded all bounds: that, in the exertion of his authority, he had committed a thoufand acts of cruelty and injustice against the poorer fort of people, whowere unable to call him to a proper 4 account: that his wife domineered with a more ridiculous, though less pernicious usurpation, among the females of the place: that, in a word, the was the subject of continual mirth, and he the object of universal detestation. Our adventurer, though extremely well diposed to believe what was faid to the prejudice of Gobble, would not give intire credit to this description, without first inquiring into the particulars of his conduct. duct. He therefore asked the speaker, what was the cause of his particular complaint. " For my own part, Sir, (faid he) I lived in repute, and kept a shop in this here town, well furnished with a great variety of articles. All the people in the place were my customers; but what I and many others chiefly depended upon, was the extraordinary fale at two annual customary fairs, to which all the country people in the neighbourhood reforted to lay out their money. I had employed all my stock, and even engaged my credit to procure a large affortment of goods for the Lammas-market: but having given my vote, in the election of a vestryclerk, contrary to the interest of justice Gobble, he refolved to work my ruin. He suppressed the annual fairs, by which a great many people, especially publicans, earned the best part of their subsistence. The country people reforted to another town. I was overstocked with a load of perishable commodities; and found myfelf felf deprived of the best part of my home customers by the ill-nature andi revenge of the justice, who employed ed all his influence among the common people, making use of threats and promises, to make them desert my shop, and give their custom to another person, whom he settled in the same business under my nose. Being thus disabled from making punctual payments, my commodities spoiling, and my wife breaking, her heart, I grew negligent and careless, took to drinking, and my affairs went to wreck. Being one day in liquor, and provoked by the fleers and taunts of the man who had fet: up against me, I struck him at his own door; upon which I was carried before the justice, who treated me: with fuch infolence, that I became: desperate, and not only abused him in the execution of his office, but alfo made an attempt to lay violent: hands upon his person. You know,. Sir, when a man is both drunk and desperate, he cannot be supposed to L 5 have damplet have any command of himfelf. I was fent hither to jail. My creditors immediately feized my effects; and, as they were not sufficient to discharge my debts, a statute of bankruptcy was taken out against me: fo that here I must lie, until they think proper to fign my certificate, or the parliament shall please to pass an act for the relief of infolvent debtors."

The next person who presented himself in the croud of accusers was a meagre figure, with a green apron, who told the knight that he had kept a public house in town for a dozen years, and enjoyed a good trade, which was in a great measure owing to a skittle-ground, in which the best people of the place diverted themselves occasionally: that justice Gobble, be-ing disobliged at his resusing to part with a gelding which he had bred for his own use, first of all shut up the fkittle-ground; but finding the publican still kept his house open, he took care that he should be deprived of his licence, on pretence that the number

number of ale-houses was too great, and that this man had been bred to another employment. The poor publican, being thus deprived of his bread, was obliged to try the stay-making business, to which he had served an apprenticeship: but being very ill-qualified for this profession, he soon fell to decay, and contracted debts, in consequence of which he was now in prison, where he had no other support but what arose from the labour of his wife, who had gone to service.

The next prisoner who preferred his complaint against the unrighteous judge was a poacher, at whose practices justice Gobble had for some years connived, so as even to screen him from punishment, in consideration of being supplied with game gratis, till at length he was disappointed by accident. His lady had invited guests to an entertainment, and bespoke a hare, which the poacher undertook to surnish. He laid his snares accordingly over night; but by the game-keeper of the gentleman to whom the ground belonged. All the excuses the poacher could make proved ineffectual in appeasing the resentment of the justice and his wise, at being thus disconcerted. Measures were taken to detect the delinquent in the exercise of his illicit occupation: he was committed to safe custody; and his wise, with five bantlings, was passed to her husband's settlement in a different part of the country.

A stout squat fellow, rattling with chains, had just taken up the ball of accusation, when Sir Launcelot was startled with the appearance of a woman, whose looks and equipage indicated the most piteous distress. She seemed to be turned of the middle age, was of a losty carriage, tall, thin, weather-beaten, and wretchedly attired: her eyes were inflamed with weeping, and her looks displayed that wildness and peculiarity which denote distraction. Advancing to Sir Launcelot, she fell upon her knees, and and clasping her hands together, uttered the following rhapsody in the most vehement tone of affliction:

"Thrice potent, generous, and august emperor, here let my knees cleave to the earth, until thou shalt do me justice on that inhuman caitiff Gobble, Let him difgorge my substance which he hath devoured: let him restore to my widowed arms. my child, my boy, the delight of my eyes, the prop of my life, the staff of my sustenance, whom he hath. torn from my embrace, stolen, betrayed, fent into captivity, and murdered!-Behold these bleeding wounds upon his lovely breast! see how they mangle his lifeless coarse! Horrour! give me my child, barbarians! his; head shall lie upon his Suky's bosom. -the will embalm him with her tears .- Ha! plunge him in the deep !shall my boy then float in a watry. tomb!---Justice, most mighty emperor! justice upon the villain who hath ruined us all!---May heaven's dreadful vengeance overtake him! may

The rest of the prisoners, perceiving the knight extremely shocked at her misery and horrid imprecation, removed her by force from his presence, and conveyed her to another room; while our adventurer underwent a violent agitation, and could not for some minutes compose himself so well as to inquire into the nature of this wretched creature's calamity.

mity. The shopkeeper, of whom he demanded this fatisfaction, gave him to understand that she was born a gentlewoman, and had been well educated: that she married a curate, who did not long survive his nuptials; and afterwards became the wife of one Oakley, a farmer, in opulent circumstances: that, after twenty years cohabitation with her husband, he fustained such losses by the distemper among the cattle, as he could not repair; and that this reverse of fortune was supposed to have hastened his death: that the widow, being a woman of spirit, determined to keep up and manage the farm, with the affiftance of an only fon, a very promifing youth, who was already contracted in marriage with the daughter of another wealthy farmer. Thus the mother had a prospect of retrieving the affairs of her family, when all her hopes were dashed and destroyed by a ridiculous pique which Mrs. Gobble conceived against the young farmer's sweet-heart, Mrs. Susan Sedgemoor.

moor. This young woman chancing to be at a country affembly, where the grave-digger of the parish acted as master of the ceremonies, was called out to dance before Miss Gobble, who happened to be there prefent alsowith her mother. The circumstance was construed into an unpardonable. affront by the justice's lady, who abused the director, in the most opprobrious terms, for his insolence and ill-manners; and, retiring in a storm of passion, vowed revenge against the faucy minx who had presumed to vie. in gentility with Miss Gobble. The. justice entered into her resentment. The grave-digger lost his place; and Suky's lover, young Oakley, was pressed for a soldier. Before his mother could take any steps for his difcharge, he was hurried away to the: East-Indies, by the industry and contrivance of the justice. Poor Suky. wept and pined until she fell into a. confumption. The forlorn widow, being thus deprived of her fon, was everwhelmed with grief to fuch a degree, degree, that she could no longer manage her concerns. Every thing went backward: she ran in arrears with her landlord, and the prospect of bankruptcy aggravated her affliction, while it added to her incapacity. In the midst of these diastrous circum-Mances, news arrived that her fon Greaves had loft his life in a fea-engagement with the enemy; and these tidings almost instantly deprived her of her reason. Then the landlord feized for his rent; and she was arrested at the suit of justice Gobble, who had bought up one of her debts, in order to distress her, and now pretended that her madness was feigned.

When the name of Greaves was mentioned our adventurer started, and changed colour; and, now the story was ended, asked, with marks of eager emotion, if the name of the woman's first husband was not Wilford. When the prisoner answered in the affirmative, he rose up, and striking his breast, "Good heaven! (cried he) the very woman who watched over my infancy, and even nourished me with her milk!—She was my mother's humble friend,-Alas! poor Dorothy! how would your old mistress grieve to see her favourite in this miferable condition!" While he pronounced these words, to the astonishment of the hearers, a tear stole foftly down each cheek. Then he defired to know if the poor lunatic had any intervals of reason; and was given to understand, that she was always quiet, and generally supposed to have the use of her fenses, except when the was diffurbed by fome extraordinary noise, or when any perfon touched upon her misfortune, or mentioned the name of her oppressor, in all which cases she started out into extravagance and frenzy. They likewife imputed great part of the diforder to the want of quiet, proper food, and necessaries, with which she was but poorly supplied by the cold hand of chance charity. Our adventurer was exceedingly affected by the distress of this woman, whom he refolved folved to relieve; and in proportion as his commiseration was excited, his resentment rose against the miscreant, who feemed to have infinuated himfelf into the commission of the peace on purpose to harrass and oppress his fellow-creatures. Thus animated, he entered into confultation with Mr. Thomas Clarke concerning the steps he should take, first for their deliverance, and then for profecuting and punishing the justice. In result of this conference, the knight called aloud for the jaylor, and demanded to fee a copy of his commitment, that he might know the cause of his imprisonment, and offer bail; or, in case that should be refused, move for a writ of Habeas Corpus. The jaylor told him the copy of the writ should be forthcoming; but after he had waited some time, and repeated the demand before witnesses, it was not yet produced. Mr. Clarke then, in a solemn tone, gave the jaylor to understand, that an officer, refusing to deliver a true copy of the commitment ment warrant, was liable to the forfeiture of one hundred pounds for the first offence; and for the second to a forfeiture of twice that fum. besides being disabled from executing his office.

Indeed, it was no easy matter to comply with Sir Launcelot's demand; for no warrant had been granted, nor was it now in the power of the justice. to remedy this defect, as Mr. Ferret had taken himself away privately, without having communicated the name and defignation of the prisoner. A circumstance the more mortifying to the jaylor, as he perceived the extraordinary respect which Mr. Clarke and the captain payed to the knight, and was now fully convinced that he would be dealt with according to law. Disordered with these reflections, he imparted them to the justice, who had in vain caused search to be made for Ferret, and was now extremely well inclined to fet the knight and his. friends at liberty, though he did not at all suspect the quality and importance

tance of our adventurer. He could not, however, resist the temptation of displaying the authority of his office; and therefore ordered the prisoners to be brought before his tribunal, that, in the capacity of a magistrate, he might give them a severe reproof, and proper caution, with regard to their future behaviour.

They were accordingly led thro' the street in procession, guarded by the constable and his gang, sollowed by Crabshaw, who had by this time been released from the stocks, and surrounded by a crowd of people, attracted by curiosity. When they arrived at the justice's house, they were detained for some time in the passage: then a voice was heard, commanding the constable to bring in the prisoners, and they were introduced to the hall of audience, where Mr. Gobble sat in judgment, with a crimson velvet night-cap on his head; and on his right hand appeared his lady, puffed up with the pride and insolence of her husband's office, fat, frowzy, and not over-clean, well stricken in years, without the least vestige of an agreeable feature, having a rubicond nose, ferret eyes, and imperious aspect. The justice himself was a little, affected, pert prig, who endeavoured to folemnize his countenance by affuming an air of consequence, in which pride, impudence, and folly were strangely blended. He aspired at nothing so much as the character of an able fpokesman; and took all opportunities of holding forth at vestry and quarterfessions, as well as in the administration of his office in private. He would not, therefore, let slip this occasion of exciting the admiration of his hearers, and, in an authoritative tone, thus addreffed our adventurer:

"The laws of this land has provided—I fays, as how provision is made by the laws of this here land, in reverence to delinquems and manefactors, whereby the king's peace is upholden by we magistrates, who represents his majesty's person, better than in e'er a contagious nation under the

SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES. 239 the fun: but, howfoemever, that there king's peace, and this here magistrate's authority, cannot be adequably and identically upheld, if so be as how criminals escapes unpunished. Now, friend, you must be confidentious in your own mind, as you are a notorious criminal, who have trespassed again the laws on divers occasions and importunities; if I had a mind to exercife the rigour of the law, according to the authority wherewith I am wested, you and your companions in iniquity would be fewerely punished by the statue: but we magistrates has a power to litigate the sewerity of justice, and fo I am contented that you shoulds be mercifully delt withal, and even dismissed."

To this harangue the knight replied, with folemn and deliberate accent, "If I understand your meaning aright, I am accused of being a notorious criminal; but nevertheless you are contented to let me escape with impunity. If I am a notorious criminal, it is the duty of you, as a magistrate, to bring me to condign punishment; and if you allow a criminal to escape unpunished, you are not only unworthy of a place in the commission, but become accessary to his guilt, and, to all intents and purposes, socius criminis. With respect to your proffered mercy, I shall decline the favour; nor do I deserve any indulgence at your hands: for, depend upon it, I shall shew no mercy to you, in the steps I intend to take for bringing you to justice. I understand that you have been long hackneyed in the ways of oppression, and I have seen some living monuments of your inhumanity-of that hereafter. I myself have been detained in prison, without cause affigned. I have been treated with indignity, and insulted by jaylors and constables, led thro' the streets like a felon, as a spectacle to the multitude, obliged to dance attendance in your passage, and afterwards branded with the name of notorious criminal.—I now demand to fee the information in consequence of which I was detained in prison, the copy copy of the warrant of commitment or detainer, and the face of the perfon by whom I was accused. I insist upon a compliance with these demands, as the privileges of a British subject; and if it is refused, I shall seek redress before a higher tribunal."

The justice seemed to be not a little disturbed at this peremptory declaration; which, however, had no other effect upon his wife, but that of enraging her choler, and inflaming her countenance. "Sirrah! firrah! (cried she) do you dares to insult a worshipful magistrate on the beach?-Can you deny that you are a vagram, and a dilatory fort of a person? Han't the man with the fatchel made an affidavy of it?—If I was my husband, I'd lay you fast by the heels for your refumption, and ferk you with a primineery into the bargain, unless you could give a better account of yourfelf-I would."

Gobble, encouraged by this fillip, resumed his petulance, and proceeded in this manner:——" Heark ye, friend, I might, as Mrs. Gobble very Vol. I. M justly justly observes, trounce you for your audacious behaviour; but I fcorn to take fuch advantages: howfomever, I shall make you give an account of yourself and your companions; for I believes as how you are in a gang, and all in a story, and perhaps you may be found one day in a cord.—What are you, friend? What is your station and degree?" "I am a gentleman," replied the knight. "Ay, that is English for a forry fellow, (said the justice.) Every idle vagabond, who has neither home nor habitation, trade nor profession, designs himself a gentleman. But I must know how you live?" "Upon my means." "What are your means?"-" My estate."-"Whence doth it arise?" "From inheritance." "Your estate lies in brass, and that you have inherited from nature: but do you inherit lands and tenements?" "Yes." "But they are neither here nor there, I doubt .-Come, come, friend, I shall bring you about presently." Here the examinationwas interrupted by the arrival of Mr. Fillet the furgeon, who chancing to pass

Which shews there are more ways to kill a dog than hanging.

TR. Fillet no fooner appeared in the judgment-chamber of justice Gobble than captain Crowe, feizing him by the hand, exclaimed, " Body o'me! Doctor, thou'rt come up in the nick of time to lend us a hand in putting about. We're a little in the flays here—But howsomever we've got a good pilot, who knows the coast, and can weather the point, as the saying is. in commanding my best services."

Our adventurer thanked him for this instance of hisfriendship, which he told him he would use without hesitation; and defired he would procure immediate bail for him and his two friends. who had been imprisoned, contrary to law, without any cause assigned. During this short dialogue, the justice, who had heard of Sir Launcelot's fa-mily and fortune, though an utter stranger to his person, was seized with fuch pangs of terror and compunction, as a grovelling mind may be supposed. to have felt in fuch circumstances; and they feemed to produce the fame unfavoury effects that are so humorously delineated by the inimitable Hogarth in the print of Felix or his tribunal, done in the Dutch stile. Nevertheless, feeing Fillet, retire to execute the knight's Bally 12 S knight's commands, he recollected himself so far as to tell the prisoners there was no occasion to give themfelves any further trouble; for he would release them without bail or mainprize. Then discarding all the infolence from his features, and affuming an aspect of the most humble adulation, he begged the knight ten thousand pardons for the freedoms he had taken, which were intirely owing to his ignorance of Sir Launcelot's quality. Yes, I'll affure you, Sir, (faid the wife), my husband would have bit off his tongue, rather than fay black is the white of your eye, if fo be he had known your capacity. - Thank God, we have been used to deal with gentlefolks, and many's the good pound we have loft by them; but what of that? Sure we know how to behave to our betters. Mr. Gobble, thanks be to God, can defy the whole world to prove that he even faid an uncivil word, or did a rude thing to a gentleman, knowing him to be a perfon of fortune. Indeed, as to your poor gentry and riff-raff, your tag," WEL M 3 rag,

At this instant Mr. Fillet returned with his friend, a practitioner in the law, law, who freely offered to join in bailing our adventurer, and the other two prisoners, for any sum that should be required. The justice, perceiving the affair began to grow more and more ferious, declared that he would difcharge the warrants and dismiss the prisoners. Here Mr. Clarke interposing, observed, that against the knight no warrant had been granted, nor any information fworn to; confequently, as the justice had not complied with the form of proceeding directed by statute, the imprisonment was coram non judice, void. "Right, Sir (said the other lawyer), if a justice commits a felon for trial, without binding over the profecutor to the affizes, he shall be fined."——" And again (cried Clarke), if a justice iffues a warrant for commitment, where there is no accusation, action will lie against the justice." " Moreover (replied the stranger), if a justice of peace is guilty of any mildemeanour in his office, information lies against him in Banco Regis, where he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. " And M 4

" And besides, (resumed the accurate Tom), the same court will grant an information against a justice of peace, on motion, for sending even a servant to the house of correction, or common jail, without sufficient cause." "True! (exclaimed the other limb of the law) and, for contempt of law, attachment may be had against justices of peace in Banco Regis. A justice of the peace was fined a thousand marks for corrupt practices." With these words advancing to Mr. Clarke, he shook him by the hand, with the appellation of Brother, saying, "I doubt the justice has got into a cursed hovel."
Mr. Gobble himself seemed to be of the same opinion. He changed co-lour several times during the remarks which the lawyers had made; and now, declaring that the gentlemen were at liberty, begged, in the most humble phrase, that the company would eat a bit of mutton with him, and after dinner the affair might be amicably compromised. To this proposal our adventurer replied, in a grave and refolute tone, a If your acting MA

acting in the commission as a justice of the peace concerned my own particular only, perhaps I should wave any further inquiry, and refent your infolence no other way but by filent contempt. If I thought the ertors of your administration proceeded from a good intention, defeated by want of understanding, I should pity your ignorance, and, in compassion, advise you to defift from acting a part for which you are fo ill qualified: but the prepofterous conduct of fuch a man deeply affects the interest of the community, especially that part of it which, from its helpless situation, is the more entitled to our protection and affiftance. I am moreover convinced, that your misconduct is not fo much the confequence of an uninformed head, as the poifonous issue of a malignant heart, devoid of humanity, inflamed with pride, and rankling with revenge. The common prison of this little town is filled with the miferable objects of your cruelty and oppression. Instead of protecting the helpless, reftraining M 5 the

the hands of violence, preferving the public tranquility, and acting as a father to the poor, according to the intent and meaning of that institution of which you are an unworthy member, you have distressed the widow and the orphan, given a loofe to all the infolence of office, embroiled your neighbours by fomenting fuits and animosities, and played the tyrant among the indigent and forlorn. You have abused the authority with which you were invested, intailed a reproach upon your office, and, instead of being revered as a bleffing, you are detefted as a curse among your fellow-creatures. This, indeed, is generally the case of low fellows, who are thrust into the magistracy without sentiment, education, or capacity. Among other instances of your iniquity, there is now in prison an unhappy woman, infinitely your superior in the advantages of birth, fense, and education, whom you have, even without provocation, persecuted to ruin and distraction, after having illegally and inhumanly kidnapped her only child, and

and exposed him to violent death in a foreign land. Ah caitiff! if you were to forego all the comforts of life, distribute your means among the poor, and do the severest penance that ever priestcraft prescribed, for the rest of your days, you could not atone for the ruin of that hapless family; a family through whose fides you cruelly and perfidioully stabbed the heart of an innocent young woman, to gratify the pride and diabolical malice of that wretched low-bred woman, who now fits at your right hand as the affociate of power and presumption. Oh! if fuch a despicable reptile shall annoy mankind with impunity; if fuch a contemptible miscreant shall have it in his power to do such deeds of inhumanity and oppression, what avails the law? Where is our admired constitution, the freedom, the fecurity of the subject, the boasted humanity of the British nation? Sacred Heaven! if there was no human institution to take cognizance of fuch atrocious crimes, I would liften to the dictates of eternal justice, and, arm-M 6 ing ing myself with the right of nature, exterminate such villains from the face of the earth!"

These last words he pronounced in such a strain, while his eyes lightened with indignation, that Gobble and his wife underwent the most violent agitation; the constable's teeth chattered in his head, the jailor trembled, and the whole audience was overwhelmed with consternation.

After a short pause, Sir Launcelot proceeded in a milder strain: "Thank Heaven, the laws of this country have exempted me from the disagreeable talk of fuch an execution. To them we shall have immediate recourse, in three separate actions against you for false imprisonment; and any other person who has been injured by your arbitrary and wicked proceedings, in me shall find a warm protector, until you shall be expunged from the commission with disgrace, and have made fuch retaliation as your circumstances will allow for the wrongs you have done the community." op sales of noit addin order to complete the mortification and terror of the justice, the lawyer, whose name was Fenton, declared, that, to his certain knowledge, these actions would be reinforced with divers profecutions for corrupt practices, which had lain dormant until should take the lead against justice Gobble, who was the more dreaded as he acted under the patronage of ford Sharpington. By this time fear had deprived the juffice and his helpmate of the faculty of speech. They were indeed almost petrified with difmay, and made no effort to speak, when Mr. Fillet, in the rear of the knight, as he retired with his company, took his leave of them in thefe words:

"And now, Mr. Justice, to dinner with what appetite you may."
Our adventurer, though warmly invited to Mr. Fenton's house, repaired to a public inn, where he thought he should be more at his ease, fully determined to punish and depose Gobble from his magistracy, to effect a general jail-delivery of all the debtors whom he had found in confinement; and, in particular, to rescue poor Mrs. Oakley from the miserable circumstances in which she was involved.

In the mean time, he infifted upon entertaining his friends at dinner, during which many fallies of fea-wit good-humour passed between captain Crowe and doctor Fillet, which last had just returned from a neighbouring village, whither he was fummoned to fish a man's yard-arm, which had fnapt in the flings. Their enjoyment, however, was fuddenly interrupted by a loud scream from the kitchen, whither Sir Launcelot immediately sprung, with equal eagerness and agility. There he saw the landlady, who was a woman in years, embracing a man dreffed in a failor's jacket, while she exclaimed, " It is thy own flesh and blood, so sure as I'm a living foul .- Ah! poor Greaves, poor Greaves, many a poor heart has grieved for thee!" To this falutation the youth replied, " I'm forry for that, mistress.-How does poor mother? how does Sukey Sedgemore?" The

The good woman of the house could not help shedding tears at these interrogations; while Sir Launcelot, interpoling, faid, not without emotion, " I perceive you are the fon of Mrs. Oakley.-Your mother is in a bad state of health; but in me you will find a real parent." Perceiving that the young man eyed him with astonishment, he gave him to under-fland that his name was Launcelot Greaves.

Oakley no sooner heard these words pronounced, than he fell upon his knees, and feizing the knight's hand, kiffed it eagerly, crying, " God for ever bles your honour: I am your name-fon, fure enough-but what of that? I can earn my bread, without being beholden to any man."

When the knight raised him up, he turned to the woman of the house, faying, " I want to see mother. afraid as how times are hard with her : and I have faved fome money for her This instance of filial duty brought tears into the eyes of our adventurer.

venturer, who affured him his mother should be carefully attended, and want for nothing: but that it would be very improper to fee her at prefent, as the furprize might shock her too much, confidering that the believed him dead. " Ey, indeed, (cried the landlady) we were all of the same opinion, being as the report went that poor Greaves Oakley was killed in battle." "Lord mistres, (faid Oakley) there wa'n't a word of truth in it, I'll assure you.-What, d'ye think I'd tell a lie about the matter? Hurt I was, to be fure; but that don't fignify: we gave 'em as good as they brought, and so parted. Well, if so be I can't fee mother, I'll go and have some chat with Sukey .- What d'ye look foglum for? the an't married, is the?" "No, no, (replied the woman) not married; but almost heart-broken. Since thou wast gone, she has done nothing but fighed, and wept, and pined herfelf into a decay. I'm afraid thou ha'st come too late to fave her life."

Oakley's heart was not proof against this information. Bursting into tears, he exclaimed, "O my dear, sweet, gentle Sukey! Have I then lived to be the death of her whom I loved more than the whole world!" He would have gone instantly to her father's house; but was restrained by the knight and his company, who had now joined him in the kitchen. The young man was feated at table, and gave them to understand, that the ship to which he belonged having arrived in England, he was indulged with a month's leave to fee his relations; and that he had received about fifty pounds in wages and prize-money. After dinner, just as they began to deliberate upon the measures to be taken against Gobble, that gentleman arrived at the inn, and humbly craved admittance. Mr. Fillet, struck with a sudden idea, retired into another apartment with the young farmer; while the justice, being admitted to the company, declared that he came to propole terms of accommodation. He accordingly offered to alk pardon of Sir Launcelot in the public papers, and pay fifty pounds to the poor of the parish, as an atonement 26 31 for his misbehaviour, provided the knight and his friends would grant him a general release. Our adventurer told him, he would willingly wave all personal concessions; but, as the case concerned the community, he infifted upon his leaving off acting in the commission, and making satisfaction to the parties he had injured and oppressed. This declaration introduced a discussion, in the course of which the justice's petulance began to revive; when Fillet, entering the room, told them he had a reconciling measure to propose, if Mr. Gobble would for a few minutes withdraw. He role up immediately, and was shewn into the room which Filler had prepared for his reception. While he fat musing on this untoward adventure, fo big with difgrace and disappointment, young Oakley, according to the instructions he had received, appeared all at once before him, pointing to a ghaftly wound, which the doctor had painted on his forehead. The apparition no fooner presented itself to the eyes of Gobble, than, taking it for granted it . 301

was the spirit of the young farmer whose death the had occasioned, he roared aloud, " Lord have mercy upon us!" and fell infentible on thefloor. There being found by the company, to whom Fillet had communicated his contrivance, he was conveyed to bed, where he lay fome time before he recovered the perfect use of his senfes. Then he earnestly defired to fee the knight, and affored him he was ready to comply with his terms, inafmuch as he believed he had not long to live. Advantage was immediately taken of this falutary disposition. He bound himself not to act as a juffice of the peace, in any part of Great-Britain, under the penalty of five thousand pounds. He burned Mrs. Oakley's note; payed the debts of the shopkeeper; undertook to compound those of the publican, and to settle him again in business; and, finally, discharged them all from prison, paying the dues out of his own pocket. These steps being taken with peculiar eagerness, he was removed to his own house, where he assured his wife he had had feen a vision that prognosticated his death; and had immediate recourse to the curate of the parish for fpiritual confolation. The most interesting part of the talk that now remained, was to make the widow Oakley acquainted with her good fortune, in such a manner as might least disturb her spirits, already but too much discomposed. For this purpose they chose the landlady, who, after having received proper directions how to regulate her conduct, vifited her in prison that same evening. Finding her quite calm, and her reflection perfectly restored, the began with exhorting her to put her trust in Providence, which would never forfake the capfe of the injured widow and fatherless; she promised to affift and befriend her on all occasions, as far as her abilities would reach: the gradually turned the conversation upon the family of the Greaves; and by degrees informed her, that Sir Launcelot, having learned her fituation, was determined to extricate her from all her troubless Perceiving berl

Perceiving her aftonished, and deeply affected at this intimation, the artfully shifted the discourse, recommended refignation to the Divine Will, and observed, that this circumstance seemed to be an earnest of further happiness. "O! I'm incapable of receiving more! (cried the disconsolate widow, with streaming eyes)-Yet I ought not to be surprised at any bleffing that flows from that quarter.-The family of Greaves were always virtuous, humane, and benevolent. This young gentleman's mother was my dear lady and benefactres: -he himself was suckled at these breasts. -O! he was the sweetest, comeliest, best conditioned babe - I loved not my own Greaves with greater affection but, he, alas leis now no more Bill "Have patience, good neighbour, (faid the landlady of the White Hart) that is more than you have any right to affirm.—All that you know of the matter is by common report, and common report is commonly false: besides, I can tell you I have seen a lift of the men that were killed in ad-W 5 miral.

miral P-iss stip, when he fought the French in the East-Indies, and your fon was not in the number." To this intimation she replied, after a confiderable pause, "Don't, my good) neighbour, don't feed me with false hope. My poor Greaves too certainly perished in a foreign land-yet he is happy:-had he lived to fee me in Is this condition, grief would foon have put a period to his days." "I tell you then, (cried the visitant) he is not dead. Thave feen a letter that mentions his being well fince the battle. You shall come along with me you are no longer a prisoner, but shall live at my house comfortably, till your affairs are fettled to your wish."

The poor widow followed her in filent aftonishment, and was immediately accommodated with necessaries.

Next morning her hostess proceeded with her in the same cautious manner, until she was assured that her son had returned. Being duly prepared, she was blessed with a sight of poor Greaves, and fainted away in his arms.

I nomers!

We shall not dwell upon this tender scene, because it is but of a secondary concern in the history of our knight-errant: let it suffice to say, their mutual happiness was unspeakable. She was afterwards vifited by Sir Launcelot, whom she no sooner beheld, than, fpringing forwards with all the eagerness of maternal affection. fhe clasped him to her breast, crying, " My dear child! my Launcelot! my pride! my darling! my kind benefactor! This is not the first time I have hugged you in these arms! O! you are the very image of Sir Everhard in his youth; but you have got the eyes, the complexion, the fweetness, and complacency of my dear and ever-honoured lady." This was not in the strain of hireling praise; but the genuine tribute of esteem and admiration. As fuch, it could not but be agreeable to our hero, who undertook to procure Oakley's difcharge, and fettle him in a comfortable farm on his own estate.

In the mean time, Greaves went with a heavy heart to the house of farmer farmer Sedgemore, where he found Sukey, who had been prepared for his reception, in a transport of joy, though very weak, and greatly emaciated. Nevertheless, the return of her sweet-heart had such an happy effect on her constitution, that in a few weeks her health was perfectly restored.

This adventure of our knight was crowned with every happy circumstance that could give pleasure to a generous mind. The prisoners were released, and reinstated in their former occupations. The juffice performed his articles from fear; and afterwards turned over a new leaf from remorfe. Young Oakley was married to Sukey, with whom he received a confiderable portion. The new-married couple found a farm ready stocked for them on the knight's estate; and the mother enjoyed a happy retreat in the character of the house-keeper at Greavesbury-hall. and 9 MR 53 doo man olds
